
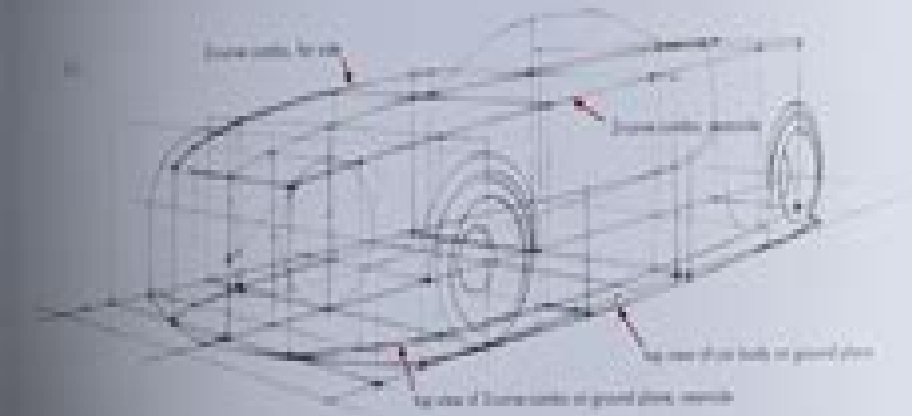
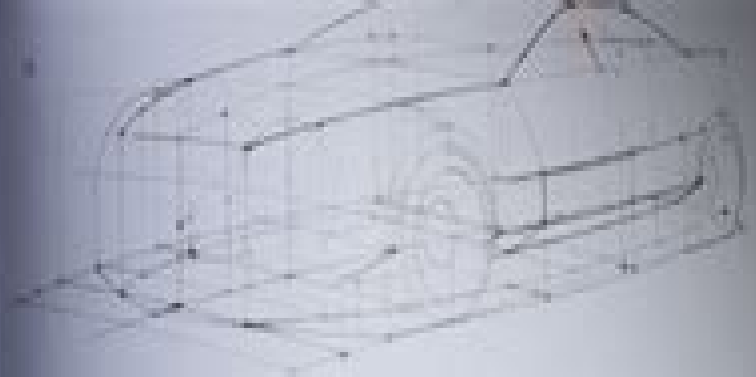
8. Use the grid from the previous page as an underlay to build up a side view as accurately as possible. Start with the wheels, since as much of the car's body is sensitive to the proportions established by them. Here, we only show the front and rear wheels sketched in during this step, but also the wheel wells and even the start of a design line connecting the wheel wells.

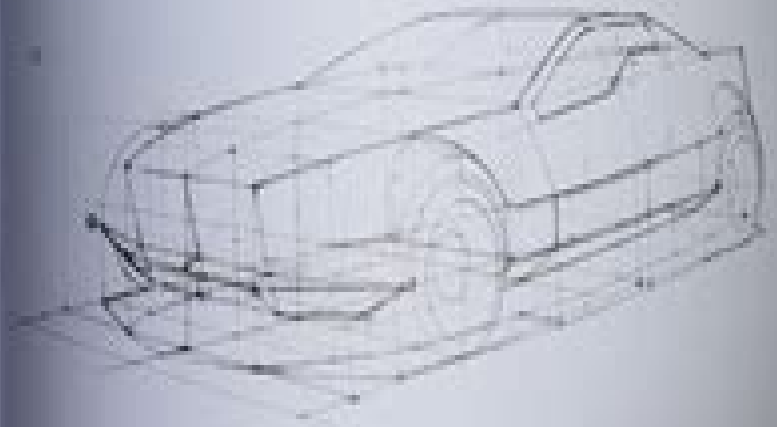
9. Like step 8, lightly sketch a front wheel on the centerline plane to use as reference when sketching in the centerline of the car (not true)



10. The construction of the car body for this demo happens to be an unrelated semi-interesting exercise. Instead of showing the sides first and then extending them across, above is a basic 2-curve combo construction, introduced earlier in the #102 section drawing chapter on pages 084. There is a middle top view of the 2 curves on the ground plane, and the perspective lines are a projected combination of those 2 top and the side view from step 2. There is also a top view curve on the ground plane that represents the widest part of the rearside top view. Note that this top view encompasses the top views of the tires as well. This sketch is the 1:1 scale at which it was drawn. This scale is fine for basic constructions, but to add details like the headlights, the grill and the wheels, it is a good idea to enlarge those areas of the drawing on a copy machine and then do an overlay. All this extra three types of detailed areas of the car are too small to construct accurately. Keep in mind, these perspective construction and working design drawings are not supposed to be worked over as many times as it takes to refine the design into one that satisfies the design goals.



11. Draw the roof line and the A, B and C pillars by drawing the 2 sections of the side body of the car (and their underlying lines on one side) and the corresponding projected centerline, underneath the roof opening. The projected centerline defines the side cross. The C pillar defines the roofdatumline, which is the angle of the side glass as the surface dives or swoops the centerline. Having the 3 sections define the width of the base of the windshield and of the rear window getting the shape of the windshield front reverse. Incorrectly drawing this shape due to the roofdatumline influence is a very common mistake, so use one or 2 section glasses at the top of the windshield and rear of the frame to figure this out. Mirroring the 3 sections to the top side can be done in many ways as the image diagonally shows, symmetry, etc. Also note that the A sections are influencing and influencing the shapes of the wheel well cutouts.



12. Add the first 2 plane sections across the full width of the car at the front. The construction starts with a straight perspective guideline going from wheel well to wheel well to the left (A to C). Then add the top view sections of the 2 planes to extend that small bridge that is starting to show up. Once the front of the Course combo have been defined, the volumes from there to the front of the wheel wells can be added. The car body's side sections, if extended, into the top half of the wheel wells, would curl down toward the centerline at the top of the wheel well. To stop this from happening the wheel well section need a new surface that connects most directly down with the side body section. Constructing these new surfaces to hide the front of the side is just like the projection of any curve onto a surface, except that you do not a straight projection but more about projecting the curve of the wheel well "as an arrow angle into the side body and then rewinding the head home with it. The side window shapes were also sketched. Notice how it defines the rear and roof line before drawing those new side body in, define the lower line of the window graphic. Now, repeat this process structure of the vehicle when adding windows and door cuts, wheel they might be, and how thick they need to be in order to be strong enough. Adding these small gaps and thickness is also important window or vehicle and to support more options.
