

—a diminutive conservative Democrat named Hugo Schiro, whom Johnson referred to as “Little”—the President decided to tour the flooded city. His motorcade stopped on a bridge spanning the Mississippi Canal, the eastern part of the city, and from the Presidential party saw whole neighborhoods all but flooded. They could see, according to the diary, that “people were walking along the bridge where they had disembarked from the boats that had brought them to dry land. Many of them were carrying the barest possessions and many of them had been sitting on their hands waiting for the boats to come back for the families and carry them to dry land.” Johnson talked with a seventy-four-year-old black man, William Marshall and asked about what had happened and how he was getting along. As the conversation ended, Marshall said, “God bless you, Mr. President. God bless you.”

In the Ninth Ward, Johnson visited the George Washington Elementary School, on Poydras Avenue, which was being used as a shelter. “Most of the people on the inside of the building were Negro,” the diary reads. “... they did not believe that it was actually the President.” Johnson entered the crowded shelter in near-darkness; there were only a couple of flashlights to light the way. “This is your President!” Johnson announced. “I’m here to help you!” The diary describes the shelter as a “mass of human beings,” with people calling out for help “in terribly loud wails from voices of all ages. . . . It was a most ghastly sight of human and material destruction.” According to an article by the historian Edward F. Haas, published fifteen years ago in the Gulf Coast Historical Society Bulletin, Johnson “... was asked for help by a woman and asked him for food and water; one woman asked Johnson for a boat so that she could look after her two sons, who had been lost in the flood. ‘Little May,’ this is horrible,” Johnson said. “I’ve never seen anything like this in my life.” Johnson assured Schiro that the resources of the federal government were “cut.”

President Schiro sent Johnson a sixteen-page telegram commending him for the revival of New Orleans. “Please know,” Johnson wrote, “that my thoughts and prayers are with the thousands of Louisiana citizens who have

The death toll is sure to be many times as high and physical damage far more extensive and enduring. . . yet to see the city of New Orleans a week after the flood to see the ruin, was to be shocked much as Johnson was a year later. New Orleans “never had been a rising along St. Charles Street, though toxic puddles once belonged to the Mississippi River or Lake of the Gulf. . . . you saw a sign on a door read ‘Still here. Cooking a pot of dog gumbo.’ Another, pointing to a branch of the Whitney National Bank, read, ‘I was sleeping inside with a big dog, an ugly woman, two sons and a cat.’” If the hurricane had not hit, there would have been no left in town.

The last holdouts, especially the poorest among them, were “a look of despair.” They seemed to sense that they were “left alone, with no savings, with no resources, means of escape forever.” On a display corner in the Ninth Ward, Johnson saw a curfew with an old woman who had been refused entry for more than a week. She wore a soiled hooded coat. She was very old and could not have weighed more than seventy-five pounds. “I’ll be here to the end,” she said. There was a bottle of warm beer in a paper bag at her feet. She didn’t drink from it. She was just drinking the sun and the heat of the evening of her struggle. “I was firm in her belief that all her neighbors, not just in Lafayette, Houston, Philadelphia, God knows where, were the lost ones. ‘Plain folks,’ she said. ‘They’ve shelled off low rent in a time of slump. She said, ‘They’re jealous of me. I got forty-four dollars’ worth of meat in that icebox inside, and they ain’t gonna take it from me. Nobody gonna lock me out of my home.’”

Although there were no looters now and very few accidents, the streets were still being patrolled in fantasy. —the New Orleans Police, New Orleans SWAT teams, the New York City Police Department, the Sacramento Police Department, the Greenbelt, Maryland police, private water contractors, the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, the 82nd Airborne National Guardsmen, San Diego lifeguards, Surf Zone Scientolists, and others. —pitching “So much Can Be Done About It,” and offered mass “assists” to the police.
