

The structural approach to the empirical investigation of the meaning of dreams - Findings from the research project „Structural Dream Analysis“

Christian Roesler

Catholic University of Applied Sciences Freiburg, Freiburg, Germany

Summary: The structural approach to the investigation of the meaning of dreams is described, which is also the foundation for the research method Structural Dream Analysis (SDA). The method focuses especially on the relationship between the dream ego and other figures in the dream and the extent of activity of the dream ego. Research with this approach has produced new insights on the connections of dream content with the personality of the dreamer. Five major dream patterns were identified which accounted for the majority of the dreams. These patterns are closely correlated with the psychological problems of the dreamers and their development in the course of psychotherapy. Additionally, typical changes in the dream series' patterns could be identified which corresponded with therapeutic change. The usability of the structural approach is exemplified with the famous specimen case of psychoanalysis, Amalia X, and its 98 dreams. The implications for different psychoanalytic theories of dreaming and dream interpretation are discussed as well as implications for the continuity hypothesis.

1. Introduction

In empirical dream research, a number of research approaches have been developed to investigate the meaning of dreams. The term "meaning of the dream" refers to the idea, not only in psychoanalytic theories of dreaming, that dreams convey additional (unconscious) information about important topics for the person which are not accessible to waking life consciousness. Often these methods which investigate the meaning of dreams involve the coding of content elements in the dreams, e.g. the occurrence of certain symbols. In this paper we would like to argue for a different approach to understanding and analyzing the meaning of dreams which we call structural. We assume that the meaning of dreams is not so much transmitted by the elements or symbols in the dream but more by the relationship between elements in the dream, especially the relationship of the dream ego to other figures and elements in the dream and the extent of agency of the dream ego. This takes up an idea first formulated by C. G. Jung, who named this approach the interpretation on the subjective level. Structural Dream Analysis was developed as a formalized research method, which applies this approach to the interpretation of dream series from analytical psychotherapies. Analytical psychotherapies, in which usually dreams are interpreted, provide excellent material for a systematic analysis of the meaning of dreams, since here dreams are systematically documented, and additionally a lot of information on the person and his/her psychological life is available.

1.1. Jung's view of the dream

Jung (1971) sees the psyche as a self-regulating system and the dream as a spontaneously produced picture of the current situation of the psyche in the form of symbols. Jung differentiates between a "subjective" level and an "objective" level to the interpretation of dreams. In the first perspective, the figures and elements of the dream are interpreted as representing parts or qualities of the dreamer's personality (especially conflictual parts, i.e. complexes), whereas in the objective perspective, they are seen as representing persons or entities existing in reality. In dreams, the unconscious psyche attempts to support ego consciousness and foster a process of personality integration by pointing to parts of the psyche not yet integrated into the whole of personality - these parts can appear personified in the dream. Through dreams, the unconscious, because it contains a more holistic knowledge about the development and integration of personality, brings new information to consciousness, which can then be integrated if a conscious understanding of the information is possible. So the term "meaning of the dream" in the context of Jungian psychology is identical with this new information brought to consciousness by way of the symbols and imagery of the dream, since it aims at correcting the attitude of consciousness; this is also the function of dreaming, as it is part of the self-regulating capacity of the psyche. To bring this about is the aim of dream interpretation in psychotherapy. So Jungian dream interpretation focuses on the relationship of the dream ego (i.e. the figure in the dream which experiences the dreamer as "myself", psychoanalytically representing ego consciousness) to the other figures in the dream, which gives an indication through the imagery of the capability of the ego to cope
