Abstract

Scientists able to identify appropriate analytical units for their domain, their natural kinds, have tended to be most progressive. In the biological sciences, evolutionary natural kinds are adaptations that can be identified by their common history of selection for some function. Human brains are the product of an evolutionary history of selection for component systems which produced behaviours that gave adaptive advantage to their hosts. These structures, behaviour production systems, and the natural kinds that psychology seeks, we argue there can be identified deductively by classing behaviour first according to its level of behavioural control. Early animals in our lineage used only reactive production. Vertebrates evolved motivation, and later Primates developed executive control. Behaviour can also be classified by the type of evolutionary benefit it bestows: it can deliver either immediate benefits (food, genes), improvements in the individual's position with respect to the world (resource access, social status), or improvements in the ability to secure future benefits (knowledge, skills). Combining history and function implies the existence of seven types of behaviour production systems in human brains responsible for reflexive, instinctual, exploratory, driven, emotional, playful and planned behaviour. Discovering scientifically valid categories of behaviour can provide a fundamental taxonomy and common language for understanding, predicting and changing behaviour – and a way of discovering the organs in the brain – its natural kinds – that are responsible for behaviour.

Key words: evolution, behaviour, emotion, brain, cognition, natural kinds

Embodied Christopher Eccleston, 2015-11-26 We grow up thinking there are five senses but we forget about the ten neglected senses of the body that both enable and limit our experience Embodied explores the psychology of physical sensation in ten chapters balance movement pressure acting in gravity breathing fatigue pain itch temperature appetite and expulsion the senses of physical matter leaving the body For each sense two people are interviewed who live with extreme experiences of the sense being investigated their stories bring to life how far physical sensations matter to us and how much they define what is possible in our life How physical sensation shapes behavior and how behavior is shaped by sensation are examined A final chapter presents a theory of what is common across the ten senses of how we deal with being urged to act and what happens when extreme sensation is inescapable Applied Evolutionary Psychology S. Gibson, David W.

Lawson,2014-03-10 As a species we are currently experiencing dramatic shifts in our lifestyle family structure health and global contact Evolutionary Anthropology provides a powerful theoretical framework to study such changes revealing how current environments and legacies of past selection shape human diversity This book is the first major review of the emerging field of Applied Evolutionary Anthropology bringing together the work of an international group of evolutionary scientists addressing many of the major public health and social issues of this century Through a series of case studies that span both rural and urban situations in Africa Asia Europe and South America each chapter addresses topics such as natural resource management health service delivery population growth and the emergence of new family structures dietary and co operative behaviours The research presented identifies the great largely untapped potential that Applied Evolutionary Anthropology holds to guide the design implementation and evaluation of effective social and public health policy This book will be of interest to policy makers and applied researchers along with academics and students across the biological and social sciences
