Young children love to be read to — as shown by the number of preschoolers and young children in libraries and bookstores. Reading to young children is a proven practice that encourages school readiness and helps protect a generation of young readers. But, as the number of children's librarians is declining sharply in many libraries, there also is a need for additional ways of providing exposure to books to preschoolers and young children. Reading to young children is one such way to get our youth interested in books as early as possible. The goal is to build a positive reading attitude.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, aged 40 to 50 years, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes, of low-intensity aerobic exercise. The control group remained sedentary. HR and EE were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased HR and EE in the sedentary women. The increase in HR was significant at rest and during exercise. The increase in EE was significant during exercise. The results suggest that a 10-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.
