Be able to undertake core talent planning activities

Introduction

Workforce planning is the mechanisms that employers use to acquire employees with the right skills, competence, and experience. When carrying out workforce planning, employers are guided by the resources available, the mission and objectives of the companies as laid down in the strategic plan and the preferred competencies and experiences as defined by the organizations' core business (Drucker 1992 p. 45). On the other hand, succession planning is the process through which an organization ensures smooth leadership continuity and advancement of individuals. It can also be defined as the process through which organizations develop individuals who show potential in preparation for filling leadership positions in an organization. According to Duane (1996), career development planning is closely related to succession planning (p. 67). In career development planning, individuals are analyzed on their potential strengths and weaknesses and put on the right career that matches their skills and abilities. More often than not, career planning is involved and decisions sometimes are made by the individual rather than the organization.

Eastman (1995) workforce planning underlies all the other processes (p.89). While carrying making staffing decisions, employers seek to hire employees within the defined parameters of the organization. At the same time, employers seek to acquire talent that will stay with the organization in the long-term for easy succession planning. Because succession planning may be costly in terms of training individual Self-initiated Expatriation Maïke Andresen, Akram Al Ariss, Matthias Walther, 2013 Globalization and the development of multinational organizations have led to an increase in the number of people spending part of their lives living and working in foreign countries. While the contemporary literature has focused on organizational expatriates sent overseas by their employers, self-initiated expatriation is becoming an important area of study in its own right. Studies on self-initiated expatriation explore the labor market positions of individuals who have relocated under their own initiative. However, no comprehensive book exists on the dynamics that underlie this type of mobility. This edited volume offers a holistic picture of self-initiated expatriation and the groups that pursue it, emphasizing many aspects for departure, including career development and career capital. It is the first book on the market to explore the issues pertaining to self-initiated expatriation from a variety of perspectives with important theoretical and practical implications. In an era of global war for talent, companies face difficulties in finding highly skilled employees. Self-initiated expatriates have the potential to fill this talent gap. National economies thus have an interest in creating favorable conditions to attract self-initiated expatriates and provoke their repatriation, and this book explores the conditions that achieve the return of employees with skills that are in demand outside of their home countries.

Globalizing Human Resource Management Paul Sparrow, Chris Brewster, Chul Chung, 2016-08-05 This new edition of Globalizing Human Resource Management examines the strategic and global issues of HRM by showing how organizations address the tradeoffs between global integration and local responsiveness. Sparrow, Brewster, and Chung discuss varying methods of globalized talent management and employer branding and conclude with a multi-dimensional approach to HRM. The second edition includes updated analyses of talent management, employer branding, and outsourcing of HRM. Broader geographic focus including a new focus on Asian firms and other emerging markets. Exploration of the impact of strategic management thinking on HR as well as the latest research in other areas such as operations, marketing, and economic geography. Complementing traditional international HRM texts, this is an ideal book for any student interested in the actual strategic logics being pursued by the HR function today.

Working Internationally Yvonne McNulty, Chris Brewster, 2019 Managing expatriates and other traditional internationally mobile workers is a significant part of many academic programmes and the focus of some specialist ones. But we cannot answer the big questions about global mobility if we exclude from our teaching people who do not fit with our usual conceptions and assumptions about who it is that organisations employ.
