

UNIT-I

Introduction

Now a days computers are playing very vital role in each and every field of problem solving. The communication medium between a computer and a human being is a typical 'language' i.e., Humans are able to communicate with the computer system in some form of language. There are basically three types of languages viz., Machine Understandable Language, Assembly Level Language and High Level Language. There are number of high level languages developed in the past three decades like FORTRAN, Pascal and Basic, C Language etc. Clearly, no other language has had so much of influence in the computing as 'C'-language. Evolution of 'C'- as a programming language has made application development very easy.

ALGORITHM

An algorithm is a method of representing the step-by-step procedure for solving a problem. An algorithm is useful for finding the right answer to a problem or to a difficult problem by breaking the problem into simple cases.

An algorithm must possess the following properties:

- i) Finiteness : An algorithm should terminate in a finite number of steps.
- ii) Definiteness : Each step of the algorithm must be precisely stated.
- iii) Effectiveness : Each step must be effective, in the sense that it should be easily convertible into program statement and can be performed exactly in a finite amount of time.
- iv) Generality : The algorithm should be complete in itself so that it can be used to solve all problems of a given type for any input data.
- v) Input/Output : Each algorithm must take zero, one or more quantities as input data and yield one or more output values.
