

Basic Principles of VAT

Trainee certified book-keepers preparing for assessment in the ICB examinations need knowledge of the basic principles of VAT (value added tax)

This short paper focuses on the principles and the entries in both the books of prime entry and the general ledger.

Value added tax is a form of indirect taxation levied throughout the European Union.

It was introduced in the UK in the early 1970s when it replaced another indirect tax, 'purchase tax'.

In general, VAT taxes individuals, not businesses. So that while registered businesses must charge VAT to their customers, they may also reclaim (with a few exceptions) any VAT they pay to their suppliers. The net amount is paid over to HM Revenue and Customs.

VAT legislation requires registered businesses to maintain proper records, including copies of invoices on which VAT is charged or payable, and to make regular returns. These are usually quarterly although in the case of smaller businesses may be annual.

VAT accounting is usually on an accruals basis – that is to say outstanding invoices are taken into account – although again smaller businesses (those with a turnover below £660,000) may by concession account on a 'cash' basis (when only VAT amounts actually paid and received are accounted for). There has been some suggestion that HMRC may well raise the turnover requirement substantially in 2007.

There are also (a reducing number) of special schemes for particular types of business (sale of second hand cars, for example) requiring particular information to be kept.

Smaller unregistered businesses, and individuals cannot reclaim or set off any VAT paid – and it becomes a cost to them.

To register for VAT, UK businesses must currently have an annual turnover of at least £61,000 (or expect it to exceed this figure in the next 30 days). However this does not preclude the registration of businesses with turnovers less than £61000 as they may apply for voluntary registration.
