Innovation, Entrepreneurship and Organizations' Business Performance Milena Ratajczak-Mrozek, Tibor Mandjak, 2018

If there are concepts that have huge academic literature and are of outstanding practical significance in corporate practice then business performance is certainly one of them. However, the authors of this special issue add interesting and exciting elements to our knowledge regarding business success and performance in many ways. This special issue underlines that business success, which has both financial and social components, depends to a great extent on the knowledge, skills, and cooperative skills of people in the organization and their openness to the world of external and internal stakeholders. The behavior of people when heavily influenced by the values of the organization and its associated business ethics has a major impact on business success. This is also true for ethically and socially controversial industries such as pharmaceutical, alcohol, and tobacco. The research results of the authors in this special issue show that different organizational frameworks and solutions can lead to the success of a business. There is, of course, no single infallible recipe leading to success. However, developing project management skills and applying a project management approach within an organization can increase the organization's entrepreneurial ability. The key feature of such a solution is that the organization becomes more open to stakeholders and processes in its local environment. This also means that an organization's ability to innovate and improve the efficiency of its innovation processes increases. It is an exciting feature of the special issue that most of the studies deal with a specific area of the global economy, namely Central and Eastern Europe. Empirical research carried out in Poland, the Czech Republic, and Hungary, and a comparative analysis of them, is a valuable contribution to the increasingly rich literature dealing with this region as well as the academic literature in the more general sense.

The first paper by Majra Hodi and Helena Hrzovcova. A study of project management practices in the Czech Republic addresses the importance of project management for organizations' innovation and performance. Based on the example of the Czech Republic, Hodi and Hrzovcova study current practices used in the field of project management and underline the importance of stakeholders' main demands and requests and the level of use of project management methods. The results that are presented provide practical implications, especially for new start-ups wanting to boost their competitiveness and innovativeness by displaying success factors for project management and the necessity for innovation in this area. The subject of project management is continued in the second paper by Katarzyna Grzesik and Katarzyna Piwowar-Sulej, entitled "Project managers' competencies and leadership styles from the perspective of organizations functioning in Poland." Grzesik and Piwowar-Sulej discuss the significance of project managers' different competencies and project leadership styles, which are especially important nowadays considering the increasing dynamics of the organizations' environment. The needed and adopted competences are compared between the strictly project-oriented organizations implementing projects for external clients and organizations that manage projects for internal purposes. The authors identify competencies which are important for organizations' success in the area of project management and may in turn lead to better business performance. The importance of human capital for organizations' performance and competitive advantage is addressed in the third paper by Łukasz Bryl called Human capital orientation and financial performance: A comparative analysis of US corporations. In the paper, Bryl verifies whether human capital oriented organizations generate a positive or even above average financial performance due to higher skills of employees, greater motivation and thus higher overall effectiveness. The paper has significant practical implications for both managers aiming at increased competitive advantage and investors in terms of the possible directions of stock market investments aimed at achieving above average returns. Financial success and high performance may also be gained by innovativeness. In the fourth paper, An innovation capability development process for firms in developing countries: A theoretical conceptual model, Gezahegn Tesfaye and Daniel Kitaw analyze the problem of innovation capability development. The much needed complexity of the analysis is reflected by combining both the technical and the financial aspects of innovation capability development. The proposed model identifies three key innovation capability constructs and is of practical value especially to organizations from developing countries as it helps to progress the innovation capabilities more effectively. The fifth paper by Włodzimierz Sroka and Richard Szant, CSR and business ethics in controversial sectors: analysis of research results, addresses the issue of organizations' performance from a different perspective, namely the particular obligations toward society or the environment constituted by corporate social responsibility. Based on the example of controversial sectors of the economy: pharmaceutical, tobacco and alcohol, Sroka and Szant examine the scale and scope of the use of business ethics principles and practices in Poland and Hungary. The analysis provides not only significant fresh insights in this field but also shows that business ethics have an influence on business success and the corporate image of organizations. The sixth paper, The themes of entrepreneurship discourse: A data analytics approach, by Philip T. Roundy and Arben Asllani, considers the importance of the language used by entrepreneurs. Roundy and Asllani identify five dominant themes in entrepreneurship discourse which address among other things technology and professional investments. The analysis of the most recurring themes in entrepreneurship discourse and their change over time sets directions for future research and indicates the importance of entrepreneurship discourse for organizations' business success. We would like to thank all the authors for their contribution to this special issue and for sharing their research. We believe that this new research represents a valuable input to our knowledge regarding business success and organizations' performance. We also want to thank the reviewers whose comments contributed to the improvement of the papers and the whole of this special issue. We hope the articles presented here will be of interest to readers, scholars and researchers around the world and that they will inspire them on to further scientific and practical research in the field of business performance.

Vom Brocke, Mendling, 2018. The earliest characteristics of BPM concentrated around process analysis, improvement, and control in a less strict manner that required reengineering. Elzinga, Horak, Lee, Bruner, 1995. More mature approaches observed since the year 2000 have been promoting the so-called process thinking, i.e. managing an organization from a process-based point of view. These approaches emphasize that process and team work-oriented organizational structures should be aligned with other management systems. Process management should be holistic by its nature so as to cover an entire organization. Although BPM researchers stressed the need for system thinking, at that time published literature distinguished two perspectives of looking at BPM: the organizational perspective and the technological perspective of BPM. From the organizational perspective, authors focused on a number of key factors, i.e. process governance, a process-based organizational structure, concept, customer orientation of internal and external processes, managing an organization based on process outputs, building process relations, and improving process maturity throughout the customer value chain, as well as through strategically aligning process initiatives to organizational objectives. From the technological perspective, the key factors of interest to authors referred to as BPMS (Business Process Management System) include IT methods, techniques, and tools that support the designing, implementation, modeling, and simulation of business processes and are considered to be an extension of classical workflow systems or an environment for designing management support IT systems, e.g. ERP class systems. An integrated and interdisciplinary approach was proposed in the framework of six core BPM elements required for the holistic and sustainable use of process management Rosemann Vom Brocke 2010 These include strategic alignment governance methods information technology people and culture In this sense technology is only one of six closely interrelated elements Currently there are two distinct directions in the evolution of BPM traditional BPM and digital BPM The former encompasses methods techniques and systems that traditionally lead to increased organizational efficiency and to improved process effectiveness and flexibility Although studies on BPM have been continuously evolving some research gaps still remain open The traditional understanding of process management seems particularly vital to organizations in developing economies which sometimes follow practices and models that were designed and tested in highly developed countries but should also be committed to drawing on their own experience and understanding of their local business environment Gabryelczyk Roztock 2018 Research on BPM in this traditional focus is still needed to better document implement and improve idiosyncratic business processes in the context of an organization environment culture and country This is also confirmed by research conducted under the JEMI Special Issue on Business Process Management Besides the traditionally shaped approach to BPM organizations increasingly treat BPM as a driver of organizational innovation and as an essential part of the digital transformation Vom Brocke Schmiedel 2015 New digital technologies such as social media digital platforms big data and advanced data analytics blockchains robotics etc enable development and growth in a constantly changing environment To take advantage of these opportunities in the digital world organizations require new BPM competences and capabilities However digital disruption creates quite a challenge for the BPM research community How can BPM capabilities be developed in order to achieve adaptability growth flexibility and agility How can BPM foster innovations within and throughout organizations These are just some of the issues for future BPM related research Threads associated with employing BPM for digital transformation have been included in a proposed Special Issue on BPM This Special Issue on BPM consists of six articles including contributions from invited authors from three transition economies Croatia Slovakia and Poland All of the papers focus on applications of the process approach to management or directly to the adoption of Business Process Management The majority of articles relate to the traditional BPM thread although the indicated BPM alliances with other concepts such as Knowledge Management Change Management and Project Management are worthy of note Only one article addresses the topic of BPM in the context of digital transformation The nature and structure of these articles may be indicative of the current motivational factors and process maturity levels of organizations adopting ordinary and or advanced BPM practices When analyzing the content of individual articles we pay attention to the factors underlying BPM adoption We understand the primary motivation to be the expected benefits from BPM Therefore we can assume this Special Issue to be a contribution to BPM development in the form of the indicating motivation and triggers for BPM adoption The first paper by Jerzy Aukstol and Magdalena Chomusko proposes a process based approach to construct a Data Control Framework for Standard Audit File for Tax SAF T The process approach is used to redesign the internal financial control processes and procedures of an organization to meet the new requirements of a fiscal audit The process approach combined with risk management and quality management is therefore a tool supporting entrepreneurs adapting to new regulations imposed on them by their external environment particularly those of tax authorities Therefore in this case the main motivation for adopting elements of BPM was the impact of external environment factors The paper by Ana Marija Stjepi Lucija Ivan i and Dalia Su a Vugec focuses on the link between Business Process Management and digital transformation The authors have developed a theoretical framework for the emerging role of BPM in digitalization and as a guide for researchers and practitioners conducting digital transformation initiatives in organizations The results obtained in the article prove that the set goals and expected benefits of digital transformation can be achieved by a rethink and improvement of the processes with a particular focus on end to end customer processes through supply chain management Based on this article we can conclude that one of the main motivational factors for BPM adoption is a desire to obtain the benefits of digital transformation The article written by Miroslava Nyul sziov and Dana Pa ov takes up the issues of using and linking the process approach and BPM lifecycle with the designing of decision support systems The authors of this paper have developed an innovative system for decision support by implementing modeling analysis and improvement methods to the transportation process in the studied organization The forwarding company s case study presented in the paper also shows how BPM adoption began with a single main process that has been streamlined and automated Therefore the motivations for BPM adoption were not only operational relating to the optimization of the cost of the process but also managerial oriented on improving the decision making process The use of information technology allowed the full exploitation of the potential for process improvements The next paper by Olga Sobolewska is about incorporating the issues of BPM into the contemporary challenges of network organizations The author claims that the organization s orientation towards both business processes and knowledge management is a strong success factor for network cooperation The author argues that modern organizations should focus on managing knowledge oriented processes to become attractive to cooperation partners for network organizations In this article BPM adoption is of a strategic nature for the purposes of undertaking new forms of cooperation The paper by Hubert Bogumi has an interdisciplinary character and in a unique way shows the connections between the concepts of process management organizational change management and IT project management The author undertook the challenge of examining how problems for organizations managing IT projects facilitate in different ways the use of distinctive approaches to improve business processes The author emphasizes that the main difficulty is the fact that modern organizations most often use a hybrid approach with elements of both traditional project management and agile The need to create a work environment that takes into account the risk of unexpected system and business regression as well as a diagnosis of the causes and methods of its mitigation is the initial research result in this paper This article contributes to the development of BPM governance and integration of IT governance The motivational factors for BPM are multi faceted as is the scope of the article However their managerial and cultural character related to methods of communication and rules of cooperation in teams should be emphasized The article by Agnieszka Bitkowska concerns the integration of the concept of Knowledge Management and BPM The author restates in her article that the identification acquisition presentation and documentation of knowledge are not independent tasks but are implemented within business processes In this paper the correlations between BPM and Knowledge Management have been examined and the benefits and practical implications resulting from the integrated implementation of both concepts are emphasized In the case of this article BPM adoption can be a success factor for the implementation of Knowledge Management and the achievement of associated benefits Studying Business Process Management from the different angles presented in this Special Issue should enrich our understanding of current BPM practices and better realize future challenges especially those related to BPM development in the context of digital transformation and the integration of BPM with other management related concepts In addition the contribution made by the authors of this Special Issue allowed us to see various motivations and triggers for BPM adoption from operational to managerial strategic cultural and technological ones and those driven by the external environment We would like to thank the authors for their contribution to this Special Issue We would also like to thank all the reviewers for their valuable comments which helped the authors improve their articles significantly We are firmly convinced that the BPM research results presented in this Special Issue will help strengthen the existing body of BPM knowledge We recommend reading the related issue of the JEMI journal to the wider community of BPM researchers practitioners and enthusiasts Guest Editors Renata Gabryelczyk Tomislav Hernaus Acknowledgments The editorial work on this Special Issue was supported by the Polish National Science Centre Poland Grant No 2017 27 B HS4 01734 References Elzinga D J Horak T Lee C Y Bruner C 1995 Business process management Survey and methodology IEEE Transactions on Engineering Management 42 2 119 128 http dx doi org 10 1109 17 387274 Gabryelczyk R Roztocki N 2018 Business process management success framework for transition economies Information Systems Management 35 3 234 253 http dx doi org 10 1080 10580530 2018 1477299 http dx doi org 10 1080 10580530 2018 1477299 Rosemann M Vom Brocke J 2010 The six core elements of business process management In Handbook on Business Process Management 1 Cham Springer Vom Brocke J Mendling J Eds 2018 Business Process Management Cases Digital Innovation and Business Transformation in Practice Berlin Springer Vom Brocke J Schmiedel T Eds 2015 BPM Driving Innovation in a Digital World Cham Springer Islamic Business Administration Minwir Al-Shammari, Mohammad Omar Farooq, Hatem Masri, 2020-03-13 This essential textbook provides a comprehensive introduction to the Islamic business environment exploring core concepts and practices in business administration from an Islamic perspective Thorough and accessible it covers the full range of Islamic business including entrepreneurship ethics organizational culture marketing finance and decision making Taking an integrated approach that aligns contemporary business practice with traditional Islamic literature the book offers an engaging exploration of the key ways in which

Managing Engineering Processes in Large Infrastructure Projects Pascal Bohulu Mabelo, 2021-10-11 Project managers are often scolded and crucified for the massive overruns plaguing their megaprojects While some project managers may deserve the blame a closer look would reveal that many competent ones are bearing the brunt of the failure not of Project Management as such but of Engineering Management Project management experts would eventually concede that once the engineering team loses control over the technical content you can no longer control the time or money spent on it Engineering mistakes and other design discrepancies always breed overruns in projects and poor performance in subsequent operations because those design errors will cause difficulties during construction and engender recurring malfunctions in operations No cost and schedule management tools or weekly status reports can prevent or remedy those situations Therefore proceeding from the Systems Thinking approach this book discusses the causes of and explores methods that address such insidious predicaments It examines topics ranging from stakeholders needs and requirements to how they ought to be translated into functions so that they may be performed by the systems under development Design and development processes and methods as well as their generic outputs and respective lifecycle implications are also discussed based on practical real life examples
