

RAY OPTICS

1. RECTILINEAR PROPAGATION OF LIGHT

It is a well established fact that light is a wave. Although, a light wave spreads as it moves away from its source, we can approximate its path as a straight line. Under this approximation, we show light as a ray and the study of light as a ray is called ray optics or geometrical optics.

1.1 Ray

The straight line path along which light travels in a homogeneous medium is called a ray.

2. REFLECTION OF LIGHT

The phenomenon in which a light ray is sent back into the same medium from which it is coming, on interaction with a boundary, is called reflection. The boundary can be a rigid surface or just an interface between two media.

2.1 Law of Reflection

We have few angles to define before considering law of reflection

- (i) Angle of incidence : The angle which the incident ray makes with normal at the point of incidence.
- (ii) Angle of reflection : The angle which the reflected ray makes with normal at the point of incidence.

A reflected ray lies in the plane of incidence and has an angle of reflection equal to the angle of incidence. $\angle i = \angle r$.

2.2 Deviation

When a ray of light suffers reflection, its path is changed. The angle between its direction after reflection and the direction before reflection is called the deviation.

As shown in the figure, the angle between reflected ray and incident ray is $180 - 2i$ where i is the angle of incidence. Maximum deviation is 180° , when angle of incident i is zero.

2.3 Law of Reflection in Vector Form

Say unit vector along incident ray = \hat{u} .

Unit vector along normal = \hat{n}

Unit vector along reflected ray = \hat{r}

Then $\hat{r} = \hat{u} - 2(\hat{u} \cdot \hat{n}) \hat{n}$

Laws of reflection remain the same whether the reflecting surface is plane or curved.

2.4 Reflection by a plane surface

Suppose a reflecting surface is rotated by an angle θ (say anticlockwise), keeping the incident ray fixed then the reflected ray rotates by 2θ along the same sense, i.e., anticlockwise.
