

PSICOLOGIA GENERALE - ROBERT FELDMAN

Capitolo 1 - Introduzione alla psicologia: la storia e i metodi.

Le radici della psicologia possono essere ricondotte agli antichi greci e romani. La psicologia è lo studio scientifico del comportamento e dei processi mentali, dell'essere vivente nel suo rapporto con l'ambiente.

Studia lo scarto tra realtà fisica e realtà percepita ma non per approfondire com'era filosofia i limiti della conoscenza ma per descrivere il processo di percezione. Si occupa di mente e cervello e delle sue relazioni con il comportamento dell'essere umano inserito nel suo ambiente fisico e sociale.

L'inizio della psicologia viene fissato nel 1879 quando Wundt fondò a Lipsia il primo laboratorio sperimentale dedicato ai fenomeni psicologici. Wundt aveva l'aspirazione di studiare gli elementi della mente mediante una disciplina descrittiva, sistematica e atomistica utilizzando il metodo scientifico sperimentale.

Finalità teoriche della psicologia:

- Psicologia generale: studi teorici sperimentali che ha come obbiettivo di formulare leggi generali che regolano il funzionamento psichico e descrive i singoli eventi psichici.
- Psicofisica: studia le leggi che regolano la relazione tra gli impulsi fisici e le reazioni sensoriali in risposta a questi.
- Psicofisiologia: studia la relazione tra apparato neurologico e evento psichico.
- Psicologia animale: studio del comportamento umano.
- Psicologia dell'età evolutiva: studio della formazione e sviluppo mentale emotivo e sociale dell'individuo a partire dallo stadio infantile a quello adulto.
- Psicologia sociale: studia le interazioni umane e le relazioni interpersonali.
- Psicolinguistica: studia gli aspetti psicologici del comportamento verbale.
- Psicopatologia: studia le caratteristiche dei comportamenti anormali.
- Psicologia dinamica: studia i processi che determinano la condotta umana.

Strutturalismo: Si focalizza sullo studio degli elementi fondamentali che costituiscono la base di percezione, coscienza, pensiero, emozioni e altri tipi di attività e stati mentali.

Wundt e gli altri strutturalisti usarono il metodo introspettivo per studiare la mente al fine di arrivare a comprendere come si cambiano le sensazioni di base per produrre la nostra percezione del mondo.

Basandosi sulle teorie di Darwin si sostiene che le attività psichiche subiscono una evoluzione per selezione naturale e che in questa evoluzione un ruolo determinante è dato dall'adattamento dell'individuo all'ambiente.

Funzionalismo: Si focalizza su ciò che fa la mente e su come funziona il comportamento, invece di studiare le componenti base. La coscienza viene definita come un flusso dinamico continuo di esperienze non compatibili in elementi.

I funzionalismi si chiesero che ruolo giocasse il comportamento nel permettere agli individui di adattarsi meglio al loro ambiente ed esaminarono come il comportamento permette alle persone di soddisfare i propri bisogni.

Psicologia della Gestalt: Von Ehmfels conia il concetto di qualità Gestaltica: le caratteristiche delle configurazioni percettive che rimangono invariate al variare degli elementi che le compongono. Il fondatore è considerato Wertheimer.

Gli psicologi della Gestalt si concentrano su come gli individui giudicano l'insieme di singoli elementi visti come unità o "intero".

Utilizzavano il metodo fenomenologico sperimentale: esso richiede il controllo rigoroso del variare dei cambiamenti percettivi del soggetto al variare delle caratteristiche fisiche indicate.

Freud e la psicoanalisi: La psicoanalisi è sia un metodo di psicoterapia sia una teoria della personalità. Si rivolge soprattutto a quei fenomeni psichici che risiedono al di fuori della sfera della coscienza. La psicoanalisi nasce soprattutto per curare i disturbi mentali indagando le dinamiche inconscie dell'individuo.

Il medico Freud ipotizzò che alla base dei disturbi mentali fosse riscontrabile un conflitto tra richieste psichiche opposte. Nel corso delle sue formulazioni formulò tre ipotesi riguardo alla possibile genesi del conflitto:

- 1- Il conflitto tra principio di piacere e principio di realtà.
- 2- Il conflitto tra pulsione sessuale e pulsione di autoconservazione.
- 3- Il conflitto tra pulsione di vita e pulsione di morte.

La psicoanalisi pone tra gli obbiettivi principali la risoluzione di tale conflitto, possibile attraverso l'indagine dell'inconscio del paziente.
