

The limits of size are separately evaluated and must meet the size requirements.

When using the surface method, the sides of the slot may be in any condition provided the limits of size are met and the sides of the slot do not violate the virtual condition boundary. For a slot, the virtual condition is equal to the MMC minus the position tolerance. In the first example shown in Figure 8-37, the virtual condition boundary is .724".

When using the axis (center plane) method, the tolerance zone for the slot center plane is a rectangular zone .016" wide when the feature is at MMC. The tolerance zone is centered on datum plane A. The tolerance zone is equal in height to the slot and extends the full length of the slot. The center plane of the slot is the center plane of the unrelated actual mating envelope of the slot. The center plane must fall inside the tolerance zone. The tolerance zone is .016" wide when the unrelated actual mating envelope departs from MMC. Additional tolerance equal to the departure from MMC is applicable.

Position Tolerance at RFS on a Slot

When a position tolerance is applied RFS on a slot, the allowable tolerance is not affected by the size of the tolerated feature. See Figure 8-38. When a position tolerance is applicable at RFS, only the axis method of verification may be used. In the given example, the tolerance zone has a fixed width of .016". The center plane of the slot must be within the tolerance zone. The center plane of the slot is defined as the center plane of the unrelated actual mating envelope.

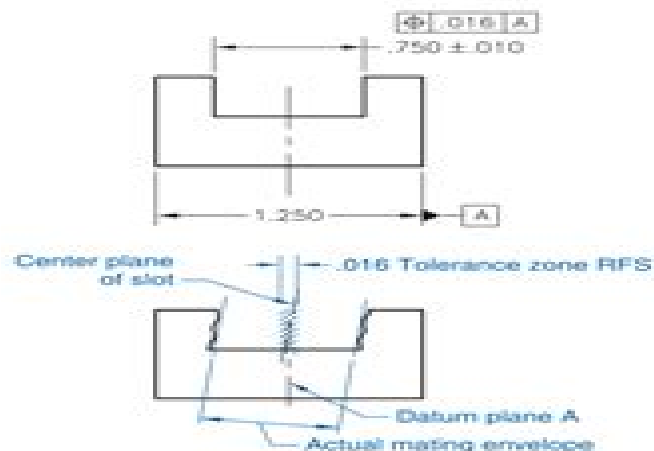

Figure 8-38. A position tolerance applied at RFS to a width feature of size creates a rectangular tolerance zone that controls the feature's center plane location.

Bounded Feature

A position tolerance may be applied to a bounded feature that has a profile tolerance applied to it. The profile tolerance establishes a maximum material boundary, and the position tolerance is used to define the allowable location variation for the maximum material boundary. See Figure 8-39. Profile tolerances are explained in another chapter.

The position tolerance value shown in the feature control frame is a total width tolerance. The .010" position tolerance creates a virtual condition boundary that is .010" smaller than the distance across the boundary created by the profile tolerance.

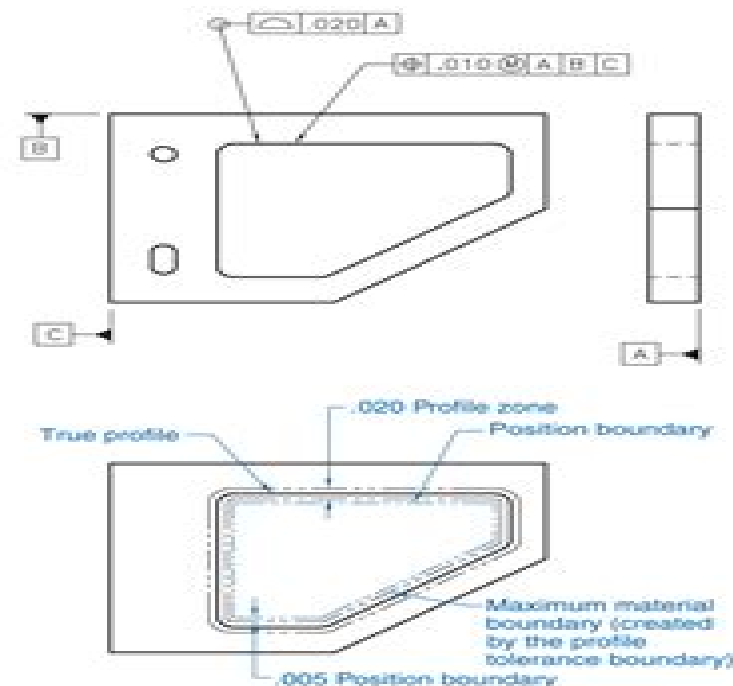

Figure 8-39. A position tolerance may be applied to define the position requirement of a bounded feature when a profile tolerance creates an inner and outer boundary.
