This Abominable Slavery W. Paul Reeve, Christopher B. Rich, LaJean Purcell Carruth, 2024-10-04 On July 22 1847 a group of about forty refugees entered the Salt Lake Valley Among them were three enslaved men two of whom shared the religion Mormonism that had caused them to flee The valley was also home to members of the Ute tribe who would sometimes barter captive women and children to Spanish colonizers Thus the question of whether the Latter day Saints would accept or reject slavery in their new Zion confronted them on the day they first arrived Five years later after Utah had become an American territory its legislature was prodded to take up the question then roiling the nation would they be slave or free George D Watt the official reporter for the 1852 legislative session reported debates and speeches in Pitman shorthand They remained in their original format virtually untouched for more than one hundred and fifty years until LaJean Purcell Carruth transcribed them In this eye opening volume Carruth Christopher Rich and W Paul Reeve draw extensively on these new sources to chronicle the session during which the legislature passed two important statutes one that legally transformed African American slaves into servants but did not pass the condition of servitude on to their children and another that authorized twenty year indentures for enslaved Native Americans This Abominable Slavery places these debates within the context of the nation s growing sectional divide and contextualizes the meaning of these laws in the lives of Black enslaved people and Native American indentured servants In doing so it sheds new light on race religion slavery and unfree labor in the antebellum period
