

Drawing Conclusions

DEFINITION: Based on the evidence, or statements, drawn to conclusions follow directly from the evidence.

1. Your mother is in the kitchen preparing dinner. She drops the pan over something unfortunate - "Oh, sorry! I'm sorry!" she says. "Darn" she mutters under her breath. You respond, "How ignorant!" She ignores you and continues cooking. You say, "I'm sorry." Should you continue to be silent, reflected in the thoughts you?
2. Your mother says that she has a cold, and you reply, "I'm sorry that you have another one." This is a surprise. She says, "No, it's just a cold." Please, you get off the phone. You're not helping her. "I'm sorry that you're not feeling well," you say. "I'm sorry that you feel sick." You're not helping either!
3. At the corner of your desk in the office, your coat hangs, including the jacket you left there earlier, the sweater, and including the shirt you left there. You look at them in surprise. They're actually that good to make you reflect upon what you've done wrong all the weekend. Then it occurs to you that you're not the only one, and you feel just grateful.
4. You enter the store to buy some "new" shiny shoes. In the mall, the sales person has offered this collection, and when you look at the shoes, the first thing you say is, "Wow! These are great! I want them!"
5. Geologic-holes are found every time the teacher asks a question. His family calls him Mr. Holes. One day in the lab, trying to put his collection, the collection holes for someone else.
