Dark They Were, And Golden-Eyed

Ray Bradbury

Introduction

Ray Bradbury is a well-known American science fiction writer. "Dark They Were, And Golden-Eyed" is a simple straightforward yet serious story. It throws light on the destructive dangers for man on earth.

The Bitterings have emigrated to the planet Mars. Other people have also gone to that planet in a rocket. They are doing this in order to escape the risks of nuclear war on earth which has the capability of utter destruction of mankind. When they reach Mars, they find all the Martian towns deserted, desolated and silent. There are some kind of ghosts, memories and paintings. There is something mysterious, that brings changes in the earthy people who have gone there to live. Harry Bittering realizes the danger in time but there is no way to escape the situation. He is determined to cling to earthly life on Mars but chances of failure are quite open to him.

Martian virus is destroying their physical structure, intellect, memory and vegetation day by day. People on Mars get indifferent to any problem. So Bittering's every effort remains futile. Consequently, they come to know, they are beginning to change in strange ways by losing their earthly mode of life.

Summary

Mr. Harry Bittering asks the family forcefully to go back to Earth planet. He is dead
