

DBQ 11: THE INDUSTRIAL BOOMHistorical Context

In 1860, the United States was mainly a land of farms and small towns. Fewer than one in five Americans lived in urban areas. (Today the figure is four in five.) While England was rapidly industrializing, the pace of industrial growth was much slower in the United States.

A number of factors seem to have delayed industrialization in the United States. With land plentiful and cheap, and labor relatively scarce and costly, Americans generally found it more profitable to make their livings on farms rather than in factories. And with the western prairies filling up with settlers, it looked in 1860 as if Americans would remain largely a nation of farmers, while England and other European nations became industrial giants.

But only forty years later, the United States had become the greatest industrial nation in the world. Between 1860 and 1900, the U.S. production of coal increased from 10,000 short tons to 110,000 short tons, an increase of 2,000 percent! Production of steel ingots rose over 5,000 percent. By 1900, U.S. workers produced more twice as much steel each year as Germany did, and five times as much as England. The urban population in the United States during those years rose from 8 million to over 30 million. American workers, in huge numbers, were leaving the farms for the factories.
