

MODULE -I. Networking Concept

Computer network

Computer network is a group of computers and other computing hardware devices (such as printers, scanners, modems, CD drives, etc.) connected to each other electronically through a communication medium. They can communicate with each other, exchange commands, share data, hardware and other resources. Computers on a network may be linked through cables, telephone lines, radio waves, satellites or infrared light beams.

Need for Network

Internet is a good example for a computer network. It is impossible to imagine a world without e-mails, online newspapers, blogs, chat and other services offered through the Internet. Apart from these, there are many other advantages in using networked computers instead of stand-alone computers. Some of them are listed below.

- Resource sharing
- Price-performance ratio
- Communication
- Reliability
- Scalability

Resource sharing:- The sharing of available hardware and software resources in a computer network is called resource sharing. For example, the content of a DVD placed in a DVD drive of one computer can be read in another computer. Similarly, other hardware resources like hard disk, printer, scanner, etc. and software resources like application software, anti-virus tools, etc. can also be shared through computer networks.

Price-performance ratio: One can easily share the resources available in one computer with other computers. The cost of purchasing licensed software for each computer can be reduced by purchasing network versions of such software. This will least affect the performance of such resources and lead to considerable savings in cost.
