Custom, Improvement and the Landscape in Early Modern Britain Richard W. Hoyle,2017-03-02 A great deal has been written about the acceleration of English agriculture in the early modern period In the late middle ages it was hard to see that English agriculture was so very different from that of the continent but by 1750 levels of agricultural productivity in Britain were well ahead of those general in northern Europe The country had become much more urban and the proportion of the population engaged in agriculture had fallen Customary modes of behaviour whilst often bitterly defended had largely been swept away Contemporaries were quite clear that a process of improvement had taken place which had seen agriculture reshaped and made much more productive Exactly what that process was has remained surprisingly obscure This volume addresses the fundamental notion of improvement in the development of the British landscape from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century Contributors present a variety of cases of how improvement custom and resistance impacted on the local landscape which includes manorial estates enclosures fens forests and urban commons Disputes between tenants and landlords and between neighbouring landlords over improvement meant that new economic and social identities were forged in the battle between innovation and tradition The volume also includes an analysis of the role of women as agricultural improvers and a case study of what can happen when radical improvement failed The volume will be essential reading for scholars of landscape studies rural and agrarian history but will also provide a useful context for anybody studying the historical legacy of mankind s exploitation of the environment and its social economic legal and political consequences

Medieval and Early Modern Representations of Authority in Scotland and the British Isles Kate Buchanan, Lucinda H.S. Dean, 2016-05-20. What use is it to be given authority over men and lands if others do not know about it? Furthermore, what use is that authority if those who know about it do not respect it or recognise its jurisdiction? And what strategies and language written and spoken, visual and auditory, material cultural and political, did those in authority throughout the medieval and early modern era use to project and make known their power? These questions have been crucial since regulations for governance entered society and are found at the core of this volume. In order to address these issues from an historical perspective, this collection of essays considers representations of authority made by a cross-section of society within the British Isles. Arranged in thematic sections, the 14 essays in the collection bridge the divide between medieval and early modern to build up understanding of the developments and continuities that can be followed across the centuries in question. Whether crown or noble government or church burgh or merchant, all desired power and influence but their means of representing authority were very different. These essays encompass a myriad of methods demonstrating power and disseminating the image of authority including material culture, art, literature, architecture and landscapes, saintly cults, speeches and propaganda, martial posturing and strategic alliances, music, liturgy and ceremonial display. Thus, this interdisciplinary collection illuminates the variable forms in which authority was presented by key individuals and institutions in Scotland and the British Isles. By placing these within the context of the European powers with whom they interacted, this volume also underlines the unique relationships developed between the people and those who exercised authority over them.
