the nature and severity of periodontal and peri implant diseases depend on the patients oral hygiene interaction between the bacterial agent the environment and the host defence mechanisms and the presence of various risk elements for periodontal peri implant diseases like genetic factors diabetes smoking etc Periodontal disease itself can also act as a potential risk factor for several systemic conditions and may significantly enhance the probability for certain systemic diseases or alter their natural course Fortunately periodontal and peri implant diseases are largely preventable and treatable conditions and their successful long term management and treatment requires a treatment strategy that integrates non surgical surgical and supportive periodontal peri implant therapy along with patient motivation and reinforcement of excellent oral hygiene measures
