Abstract

The aim of this study was to characterize saponin substances in the partial pure extract (PPE) of Tacca chantrieri as well as to evaluate anti-inflammatory and antimicrobial activities of the PPE. The result showed that the obtained PPE was yellowish brown powder. The results showed that the saponin substances existing in T. chantrieri stem were of a triterpene glycoside group. Anti-inflammatory test was conducted by using an enzymatic assay. It was found that the PPE (4 mg/ml) and a standard aspirin (4mg/ml) possessed a cyclooxygenase-2 inhibition of $27.74 \pm 15.48\%$ and $55.66 \pm 1.81\%$, respectively. The IC_{50} of anti-inflammatory action of PPE was found at 5.30 mg/ml. An aqueous solution of 25.00% w/w PPE was tested for antimicrobial activity by using the plate diffusion method against various microorganisms. The result demonstrated that the PPE had more inhibitory effect against gram negative than gram positive bacteria. More importantly, the PPE showed significantly stronger inhibitory effect against pathogenic fungi than on bacteria ($p < 0.05$). The MIC value of PPE against the most sensitive gram negative (Aeromonas hydrophila) and gram positive bacteria (Staphylococcus aureus) was 1.56 mg/ml. The MIC value of the PPE against the tested dermatophytes was obviously lower than that against the tested bacteria. The value was less than 0.39 mg/ml for all three test fungal strains.

Key words : Tacca chantrieri, Anti-inflammatory, Antimicrobial, Cyclooxygenase-2, COX-2

Introduction

The genus Tacca (Taccaceae) is mainly distributed in tropical region of Asia, Pacific Islands, and Australia. Tacca chantrieri a plant so-called "Tacca" is commonly found in the northern and northeast area of Thailand. The rhizome of T. chantrieri has been used in Chinese medicines for the treatment of various diseases including high blood pressure, burns, gastric ulcers, enteritis, and hepatitis.^(10, 12) It has been reported that the main active component comprising in its rhizome is a wide array of saponins which are generally known as non-volatile, surface-active compounds that are widely distributed in nature, occurring primarily in the plant kingdom. The saponin substances are structurally diverse molecules and chemically referred to two main groups; triterpene and steroid glycosides. These two groups can be differentiated by the Liebermann Burchard test.⁽¹¹⁾

Saponins have been reported to possess antifungal properties. The magnitude of the hemolytic activity of saponins has often been linked with the antifungal and anti-inflammatory activities of the saponins.⁽⁹⁾ In recent years, naturally occurring compounds including saponins have been reported to inhibit the effect of diverse environmental mutagens and carcinogens.

The anti-inflammatory activity is an important component of innate immunity occurs frequently in human. The severe side effects of steroidal and nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs evoked us to search for new anti-inflammatory agents from natural botanical sources which may have minimal side effects. Certain steroid and triterpenoid derivatives were known to possess anti-inflammatory activity in vivo.⁽³⁻⁶⁾

The development of resistant microorganisms on prolonged exposure to existing antimicrobial agents has been known for a long time. This has led to the continual search for ways of neutralize resistant strains of microorganisms. Many bioassay reports have indicated the presence of antimicrobial compounds among many higher plants in Thailand.^(7, 8)
