What hormones are involved in the maintenance of blood sugar?

Why?

Our bodies require a constant supply of glucose for its energy. The pancreas is the source from which glucose is released into the bloodstream. Blood glucose levels are lower than 100 after glucose has been metabolized in the body. At some point, levels of blood glucose must be restored to their normal state. Two hormones control this process, one that is secreted by the α cells of the pancreas, and another by the β cells. The former, pancreatic islet cell hormone, helps regulate blood glucose levels and is secreted by the α cells of the pancreas.
