- 10 Although the coefficient on Age is negative, the Age variable is not statistically significant. Thus, we cannot find a
11 significant relation. It suggests that, on average, price falls as age increases, but without this relationship, the Age variable is not a good
12 use price predictor.
- 13 At price $70, there are 4.2-4.3 cars sold in the two-week period ending 10/20/00.
- 14 Therefore, the two independent variables of price level and age are significant predictors. They also enable us to answer price 15 related questions. Because these variables are related, we cannot isolate the relationship.
- 16 However, the Age variable is not statistically significant. It suggests that, on average, price changes sufficiently with 17 age to make a difference in price level. When we price level is constant, we can see that.
- 18 The coefficient on Age is not statistically significant. It suggests that, on average, price changes sufficiently with 19 price, and the Age variable is not significant.
- 20 When we include price level, the coefficient on Age is not statistically significant. It suggests that, on average, price changes sufficiently with 21 price, and the Age variable is not significant.
