Bananas and Plantains S. Gowen, 2012-12-06 In a field of mature bananas plants can be seen at all stages of vegetative growth and fruit maturity providing a fascination for anyone who has an interest in growing crops Banana farmers in the tropics can harvest fruit every day of the year The absence of seasonality in production is an advantage in that it provides a continuity of carbohydrate to meet dietary needs as well as a regular source of income a feature that perhaps has been under estimated by rural planners and agricultural strategists The burgeoning interest in bananas in the last 20 years results from the belated realization that Musa is an under exploited genus notwithstanding the fact that one genetically narrow group the Cavendish cultivars supply a major export commodity second only to citrus in terms of the world fruit trade International research interest in the diversity of fruit types has been slow to develop presumably because bananas and plantains have hitherto been regarded as a reliable backyard source of dessert fruit or starch supplying the needs of the household and in this situation relatively untroubled by pests diseases or agronomic problems

In Review Inter-American Foundation, Tools for Land Use Analysis on Different Scales B.A.M Bouman, Hans G.P. Jansen, Robert A. Schipper, Huib Hengsdijk, André Nieuwenhuys, 2012-12-06 Regional development is intrinsically related to the way in which the land is used Given the rising awareness of the multifunctionality of the world s land resources policy makers now face the complex task of accommodating multiple objectives of an increasing number of stakeholders in regional development This implies a need for tools that can be employed to provide insights into the opportunities and limitations of land use Those tools should be capable of quantifying trade offs between socio economic sustainability and environment related policy objectives This book offers a detailed account of a range of interdisciplinary methodologies for land use analysis developed over a twelve year period 1986-1998 in Costa Rica through collaborative research between three institutions one from the North Wageningen Agricultural University of The Netherlands and two from the South the Tropical Agricultural Research and Higher Education Center CATIE and the Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock MAG. The methodologies span a number of spatial scales ranging from the field level all the way to the national level. Concepts of systems analysis and information technology play a pivotal role in each of the methodologies. Together they form a unique toolbox that deserves ample use in the process of agricultural policy design.

Biotechnology Applications for Banana and Plantain Improvement, Report on Caribbean Black Sigatoka Management Workshop, The Report: Gabon 2014 Oxford Business Group, 2014-09-30. With just 1.63m people Gabon is the second smallest member of the six country Central African Economic and Monetary Community in terms of population after Equatorial Guinea. However the country's well developed hydrocarbons sector has made Gabon the second largest economy in the sub region. The economy of Gabon has largely developed on the back of the country's substantial oil and gas resources however declining production levels are leading the government to pursue a strategy of economic diversification. While efforts to encourage new investment and offshore oil exploration may yet yield results the development of other industries including forestry and mining is being encouraged. Meanwhile like many African countries Gabon is working to ensure that a larger percentage of natural resource wealth is channelled into the national economy.
