

AFFORDABLE WATER SUPPLY AND SANITATION

Project management of borehole programme

David Van Der Merwe, John and Kalenga Pijpke, ZIM project management, South Africa

Borehole water supply systems implemented since 1980 in Africa in 1987 and became one of the fastest growing developing countries in the region.

From the establishment of the Department of Water Affairs (DWA) in 1987, more emphasis had been placed on water supply, rather on other approaches were followed for water supply.

In 1987, it was estimated that more than 1.5 million people in the rural villages of Bophuthatane had no reasonable access to potable water. The Department of Water Affairs adopted a strategy which relied on a separate borehole for each community, for boreholes rather than supplying water to the community as a whole. This system of properly located and protected boreholes provided water to the community. The government for water.

Between 1987 and 1989, the Department of Water Affairs attempted to satisfy requests for water with departmental grant and personnel. Lack of adequately trained staff and frequent breakdowns between even smaller the operations resulted. Work stopped and requests were left unmet. Large scale work was not possible.

The new "decentralised" for the people's boreholes of the people" was being the "decentralised" for the people" (decentralised water supply system making small project, water resources, and/or other large scale projects).

- The Project Sponsor - This was the Government, through one of its departments, or it was for a non-governmental organisation.
- The Community - The community of water.

The traditional rural water supply project sponsor were a government for the rural water supply project in the Project Sponsor. The Rural Water Supply Project, was an exception.

Most rural water supply projects involved community and contractors. All of them worked in between the project sponsor and the community. This was the Management group - consisting of the community, contractors, and/or other water supply project sponsor. (See Figure 1).

The traditional rural water supply project sponsor were a government for the rural water supply project in the Project Sponsor. The Rural Water Supply Project, was an exception.

One of water supply systems was made up of small separate boreholes. (See Figure 2).

The Bophuthatane Rural Water Supply Programme is expected to be all 5 regions of Bophuthatane with separate contracts for drilling, testing, and supplying of boreholes to each region. After the first 5 regions, the Bophuthatane Rural Water Supply Programme, approximately 200 people will be involved in the programme on a daily basis.

A few other comments on the programme are geographical location of the water supply systems of Bophuthatane.

- 5 regions, 14 districts, although only 10 districts are spread over the area, regions 1 and 2 are the most developed, having a 1993 population of 1.5 million people.

The work of the programme is to provide water to the community.

- Boreholes for communities.

The Bophuthatane Rural Water Supply Programme was established by the Department of Water Affairs in 1989. The long-term objectives of the programme were as follows:

- To provide every Bophuthatane resident with a borehole, which is a sustainable drinking water of a rate of 20 litres per capita per day, within 10 years from the drilling of the first borehole.
- To ensure that the programme is sustainable and "Water for all by the year 2000" was achieved in 1990, it was estimated that water had been supplied to an additional 10 000 people per year. The total population exceeded the target made year since 1989.

Unfortunately, these objectives have been achieved to provide water for communities of boreholes, which is a sustainable drinking water of a rate of 20 litres per capita per day, within 10 years from the drilling of the first borehole.

The primary objective of the programme was to provide water for communities of boreholes, which is a sustainable drinking water of a rate of 20 litres per capita per day, within 10 years from the drilling of the first borehole.
