

Abstract

1. Which researching process and why is it important in biology?
Researching (science) is to find the answer/answers/answers to the questions/problems that scientists are trying to solve. Researching is to find the answer/answers to the questions/problems that scientists are trying to solve. Researching is to find the answer/answers to the questions/problems that scientists are trying to solve.
 2. What does an organism's structure and function have to do with the different habitats it occupies and the different environmental conditions it experiences?
An organism's structure and function are related to the environment it lives in. For example, a fish has a streamlined body to move through water easily. A bird has wings to fly. A plant has roots to absorb water and nutrients from the soil.
 3. Describe the process and purpose of cell specialization.
Cell specialization is the process by which cells become more specialized to perform specific functions. This is done by the cell turning on or off certain genes. For example, a muscle cell has many mitochondria to produce energy for contraction. A nerve cell has a long axon to carry signals over long distances.
 4. Explain the processes that allow a cell to move and function.
A cell moves by using cilia or flagella. It functions by using organelles like the nucleus, mitochondria, and Golgi apparatus.
 5. What is the process used to collect data and interpret results as it applies to the study of a cell?
 6. How does the structure of a cell relate to the function of the organelles and the function of the cell as a whole? (The organelles are the parts of the cell that perform specific functions. The cell as a whole is the sum of all the organelles working together.)
