Arranged marriage.

In the past, Arranged marriage was very common, and still is in some countries in the world. Arranged marriage is when parents choose a spouse for their sons and daughters. According to Gagoomal (2009), "Arranged marriage is broadly defined as unions in which people other than the bride and groom, typically parents or other family members, play important or decisive roles in determining who marries whom." (p. 590). Asia and The Middle East follows this tradition and believe that marriage should come first then think about love. Some people believe in love at first sight, however, others believe that it takes time and patience to love someone and develop a relationship with them. Arranged marriage leaves their child with no choice but to marry the person they picked out for them. This may also be referred show more content... India is the most common country that follows this tradition and is very serious about it. Arranged marriage is different than Traditional marriage in many ways. Traditional marriage is when a man chooses a woman for him, then speak to her parents and agree to meet up to discuss it together. In this condition, the lady had a right in the marriage; she can reject the man if she does not want to marry him. Traditional marriage does not force the lady to marry the man that proposed to her. In this case, they can get to know each other though a small period of time so she can make their decision if they want to marry each other. There are those who do not agree with neither Arranged marriage nor Traditional marriage. They believe that the man and the women should marry in love. Many people believe that arranged marriage is a good choice because it guarantees a spouse for them, it is more stable and secure than love marriage and leads to
