

Efficiency Issues

- o Routing is optimal for receivers at the sender's MAG that belong to the same LMA, and for the fixed Internet
- o Routing detours via LMAs, whenever
 - Mobile listener is attached to another MAG
 - Mobile listener is associated with a different LMA
- o No way to suppress the forwarding uplink to LMA
- o Admission control/rate limiting may be desirable to prevent flooding LMAs

Including Context in a Routing Algorithm for the Internet of Things Vítor Carvalho, Pedro Medeiros, 2012 The Internet of Things assumes that a large number of devices which are used on a daily basis will eventually become connected to the Internet This scenario will provide room for a large set of new applications however the network connections of an enormous set of nodes which can be connected and disconnected can move around and which have limitations with regards to their processing and communication capabilities raises the need for the development of new message routing algorithms different from those being in use today In this thesis a contribution is made towards the development of this type of algorithms In particular the idea which is tested is whether routing algorithms can improve their performance at various levels such as message delivery time number of messages lost power consumption etc if routing decisions can make use of the concept of Context

EFFICIENT ROUTING AND OFFLOADING DESIGN IN INTERNET-OF-THINGS SYSTEMS Ning Wang,2018 One of the fundamental challenges in Internet of Things systems is that network environment is always changing Conventional networking approaches do not consider the dynamic evaluation of the networks or consider the network dynamic as a mirror thing which may not be able to work or has a low efficiency in the Internet of Things systems This dissertation is uniquely built by considering the dynamic network environment and even taking advantage of the network dynamic to improve the network performances with a focus on the routing and offloading issues The first part is related to the routing design in the opportunistic mobile networks The opportunistic mobile network is expected to be an intrinsic part of the Internet of Things Devices communicate with each other autonomously without any centralized control and collaborate to gather share and forward information in a multi hop manner The main challenge in opportunistic mobile networks is due to intermittent connection and thus data is delivered through store carry forwarding paradigm In this dissertation We found an observation regarding the contact duration and proposed efficient data partitioning routing algorithms in the opportunistic mobile networks The second part is related to the offloading issues in the Internet of things systems With the surging demand on high quality mobile services at any time from anywhere how to accommodate the explosive growth of traffics without existing network infrastructures is a fundamental issue Specifically We consider three different offloading problems i e cellular data offloading cloud task offloading and mobile worker task offloading problems in vehicular networks cloud and crowdsourcing platforms The common issue behind them is how to efficiently utilize the network resources in different scenarios by design efficient scheduling mechanisms For the cellular data offloading We explored the trade off of cellular offloading in the vehicular network For the cloud task offloading We conducted the research to adjust the offloading strategies wisely so that the total offloading cost is minimized For the worker task offloading in the smart cities We optimized the cost efficiency of the crowdsourcing platforms
