

METHANOL DRUM TRANSPORT, HANDLING, AND STORAGE*1.1 INTRODUCTION

Totes, drums (55 gallon), and cans (5 gallon, and 1 gallon) are used to transport, store, and dispense methanol in a wide variety of circumstances by low volume users. Non-bulk transport and storage of hazardous material are regulated activities in the U.S. and some other countries. Failure to adhere to applicable regulations may be punishable by fines and imprisonment. Requirements are specific to the country and the circumstances; however requirements will generally consist of the following: shipping papers, container labeling, transport vehicle placarding, driver training and licensing, and availability of emergency response equipment. If you are not a designated hazardous materials carrier, then it may be against the law to transport methanol in totes, drums, and cans.

Do not transport methanol in your personal vehicle. Do not store methanol totes, drums, or cans indoors or in your home. Storage requires precautions for flammable loading, fire-safe storage, ventilation, spill containment, spill cleanup, and fire suppression.

Never use mouth suction to siphon-transfer methanol. Methanol liquid and vapor are toxic to humans. Exposure is cumulative and may result in harm if vapor or liquid are inhaled, ingested, or contacted with skin for extended periods of time.

Methanol (CAS: 67-56-1, NIOSH: PC-1400000, DOT: 1230, UN-1230, NA-1230) is classified by the International Code Council (ICC) and the National Fire Protection Agency (NFPA) under the Uniform Fire Code as a "IB Flammable Liquid" and by the United Nations as a "1993 Class 3 Flammable Liquid." NFPA and Department of Transportation (DOT) rank Flammability as a 3 primary hazard, and toxicity, as a 6.1 ranked secondary hazard. Guidelines for handling IB flammable liquids are provided by codes and standards published by ICC, NFPA, and the International Fire Code.

ICC and NFPA guidelines are recommended as 'best practices,' but are not mandatory unless deemed so by national, or local authority. Within the United States, local authority generally rests with the local Fire Marshal. Mandatory regulations have been developed within the United States by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), an agency of the federal government. Specific safe handling practices are given under three separate regulations for various industries, circumstances, and work environments:

- General Industry: 29 Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) 1910.106
