

Unit 2 Study Guide

General Notes

- Biological psychology: scientific study of biological aspects of behavior & mental processes
- Neuroscience: scientific study of nervous system
- Neuron: cells that receive and transmit information from one body part to another
- There are three basic types of neurons:
 - Sensory (afferent) neurons convey information from specialized receptor cells in the sense organs, the skin, and the internal organs to the brain
 - Motor (efferent) neurons communicate information to the muscles and glands of the body (part of PNS)
 - Interneurons communicate information between neurons; they are the most common type of neuron found in the human nervous system
- The cell body (also called the soma) contains the nucleus, which provides energy for the neuron to carry out its functions
- Dendrites are short, branching fibers extending out from the cell body that receive information from other neurons or specialized cells
- The axon is a single, elongated tube that extends from the cell body and carries information from the neuron to other neurons, glands, and muscles
- Many axons are surrounded by a myelin sheath, a white, fatty covering that insulates axons from one another and increases the neuron's communication speed
- Terminal branches/buttons are at end of neurons and where information is sent out from
- Sir Charles Sherrington concluded that the link between the axon tip of the sending neuron and the dendrite or soma of the receiving neuron was the synapse
- Action potential: a brief electrical charge that travels down its axon (positive)
 - Sodium ion channels open; sodium ions rush into the axon.
 - Then sodium channels close, and potassium ion channels open, allowing potassium ions to rush out of the axon
 - Finally, potassium channels close
 - This sequence of depolarization and ion movement continues in a self-sustaining fashion down the entire length of the axon
 - The result is a brief positive electrical impulse that progressively occurs at each segment down the axon—the action potential
 - Following the action potential, a refractory period occurs during which the neuron is unable to fire. During this thousandth of a second or less, the neuron repolarizes, that is, it reestablishes the resting potential conditions.
- Resting potential: when an axon's interior has a negative electrical charge
- Threshold: level of stimulation required to trigger a neural impulse (if excitatory minus inhibitory signals exceeds threshold, the combined signals activate action potential)
- All-or-nothing response: a neuron must be sufficiently stimulated for action potential to occur or nothing will happen
