

What Is Referencing/Citation?

As a university student, you're going to be a contributing member to ongoing scholarly conversations. Part of that work involves referencing. Referencing, also called citation, is a standard set of rules for using other people's words, ideas, information, or images in your own work, and for formatting documents. It is an important part of academic integrity and university writing. Referencing gives credit to the original creators of the work, boosts the credibility of your work, and provides your reader with a reliable path to the original source. Inaccurate citations make it difficult or impossible for your reader to locate the original source. Missing citations give the impression that you are trying to take credit for the work of others. If you don't use referencing correctly, it may be considered plagiarism, which will likely result in serious consequences (see the policy on Student Community Standard's page). Referencing is something all scholars do, so don't be afraid to reach out for help!

This guide will introduce you to some helpful rules about APA Style for referencing that you will use as a student. APA Style was developed by the American Psychological Association (APA) and is commonly used in the social sciences. The Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (7th ed.) is the main source of information for this handout.

Note: square brackets refer to the pages in the Manual (e.g., [APA, p. #]).
