The short vowels and hamza

الْحَرَكَاتُ الْقَصِيرَةُ وَالْهَمْزَةُ

Fat-ha

Kasra

Damma

There are three short vowel sounds in Arabic: fat-ha, which makes an 'i' sound as in the English word 'meat'; kasra, which makes an 'e' sound as in the English word 'bet'; and damma which makes an 'u' sound as in the English word 'but'. Fat-ha and damma are written above the letters of the alphabet, whereas kasra is written below them. To read a vowelised letter, simply take the sound of the letter (for example, the sound of the letter meem is 'm'), and then add the 'i', 'e' or 'u' vowel sounds. Study the following examples:

ن	ن	ن	ش	ش	ش	ب	ب	ب
na	ni	nu	sha	shi	shu	ba	bi	bu

The character below is called a hamza. Copy it out eight times on the line provided.

The first letter of the alphabet, alif, is a weak letter which does not really have a sound of its own. However, if a hamza is written on or below the alif together with one of the short vowels, then the alif will take the sound of the vowel. Study the following:

أ	إ	أ
u	i	u

Note how the hamza with kasra sits underneath the alif, whereas the hamza with fat-ha and the hamza with damma sit on top of the alif.

For each of the tables numbered from one to three below, copy out the alphabet together with the short vowels onto the line below the letters. In the first table, a fat-ha has been added to each letter; in the second, a kasra; and in the third, a damma. Practice reading the vowelised letters out loud for each of the first tables.
