The Geographical Structure of Epidemics Peter Haggett,2000 The ways in which the great plagues of the past and present have spread around the world remains only partly understood Peter Haggett s research over the last thirty years has focused on mapping and modelling the paths by which epidemics spread through human communities In 1998 this led to him being invited to give the inaugural lectures in a new series the Clarendon Lectures in Geography and Environmental Studies The resulting book Geographical Structure of Epidemics presents an accessible concise and well illustrated account of how environmental and geographical concepts can be used to enhance our knowledge of the origins and progress of epidemics and sometimes to slow to slow or halt their spread

Outline for Textbook Project for Introductory Survey Course in World History to 1500. The Innovative Mind in History, to 1500 Irmtraud Eve Burianek,2017-10-02 Project Report from the year 2016 in the subject World History General and Comparison grade language English abstract The proposed project is an anthology of readings suited for a college introductory survey course in world history to 1500 The anthology will be built around the theme of the innovative mind in history The anthology will look at examples of significant innovations inventions new ideas and new technology from prehistory to 1500 The author seeks to bring fresh new ideas and interpretations of the often routine taught survey of ancient and medieval history The introduction will present the theme of the innovative mind define the term and discuss the methodology as well as the learning objectives The author wants to select from each major civilization in the world defining examples of innovation or advances in thinking For each example the author will provide scholarly articles excerpts from books images diagrams to study and questions to lead discussions or for reflection The rationale for this project is based upon author s years of experience in the college classroom as well as online teaching She has observed that students attentions are captured when explaining how a certain technology was developed or how certain modes of thought familiar today originated in history In this way students saw a connection between the past and present Their interest is stimulated Students are especially interested when they recognize the connection of new ideas in antiquity and the Middle Ages throughout times and to their own present Furthermore the author has seen that subjects such as these are inadequately discussed in textbooks and not often covered in companion readers The author also observed that more college students are entering into the so called STEM Science Technology Engineering and Mathematics fields Examples from history of advances in scientific thinking theorizing and of practical application will appeal especially to these students It can be predicted that this anthology will fill a need in the curriculum and college instructors will want to adopt it for their survey classes
