Course Description

AP Human Geography is a yearlong college level survey course designed to introduce students to the effects humans have on the Earth's surface. Units of study have been outlined in the AP Human Geography Course Description booklet published by the College Board. Topics include: the nature of geography, population, movement/migration, culture, language, religion, ethnicity and gender, political geography, economic development, agriculture, industry and urban geography.

Course Objectives

Emphasis is placed on geographic models and their applications. Case studies from around the globe are compared to the situation in both the United States, and North Carolina and internet activities are used to explore certain topics. Students are introduced to the systematic study of patterns and processes that have shaped human understanding, use, and alteration of Earth's surface. Students will learn about and employ the methods of geographers, including observation, mapmaking, data gathering and reporting, and technical writing. Students will employ spatial concepts, geographic vocabulary, and landscape interpretation to a variety of locations and situations around the globe and in local areas. Students will develop a geographic perspective with which to view the landscape and understand current events.
