Nudge and the Law Alberto Alemanno, Anne-Lise Sibony, 2015-09-24 Behavioural sciences help refine our understanding of human decision making Their insights are immensely relevant for policy making since public intervention works much better when it targets real people rather than imaginary beings assumed to be perfectly rational Increasingly governments around the world are keen to rely on those insights for reshaping public interventions in a wide range of policy areas such as energy health financial services and data protection When policy making meets behavioural sciences effective and low cost regulations can emerge in the form of default rules smart disclosure and simplification requirements While behaviourally informed intervention has a huge potential for policymaking it also attracts legitimacy and practicability concerns Nudge and the Law takes a European perspective on those issues and explores the legal implications of the emergent phenomenon of behavioural regulation by focusing on the challenges and opportunities it may offer to EU policy making and beyond

This study offers an international review of the initial applications of behavioural economics to policy with a particular focus on regulatory policy      Competition and Stability in Banking Xavier Vives, 2020-11-03 A distinguished economist examines competition regulation and stability in today's global banks Does too much competition in banking hurt society What policies can best protect and stabilize banking without stifling it Institutional responses to such questions have evolved over time from interventionist regulatory control after the Great Depression to the liberalization policies that started in the United States in the 1970s The global financial crisis of 2007-2009 which originated from an oversupply of credit once again raised questions about excessive banking competition and what should be done about it Competition and Stability in Banking addresses the critical relationships between competition regulation and stability and the implications of coordinating banking regulations with competition policies Xavier Vives argues that while competition is not responsible for fragility in banking there are trade offs between competition and stability Well designed regulations would alleviate these trade offs but not eliminate them and the specificity of competition in banking should be accounted for Vives argues that regulation and competition policy should be coordinated with tighter prudential requirements in more competitive situations but he also shows that supervisory and competition authorities should stand separate from each other each pursuing its own objective Vives reviews the theory and empirics of banking competition drawing on up to date analysis that incorporates the characteristics of modern market based banking and he looks at regulation competition policies and crisis interventions in Europe and the United States as well as in emerging economies Focusing on why banking competition policies are necessary Competition and Stability in Banking examines regulation's impact on the industry's efficiency and effectiveness
