

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how artists exploit and manipulate it to their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the subject matter.

Mixing and comparing colours

The perception of light makes colours visible. Light travels in waves of different lengths, which give each wavelength a different perception of colour. The range of wavelengths perceived can be called the visible spectrum – the shortest visible wavelength is violet, and the longest is red. Artists can gain insight from scientific principles that describe how wavelengths and other factors – like the colour of the background – affect the colour in a painting by studying the science of reflecting light.

The colour wheel

From understanding the science of colour and its application by 19th-century artists, artists began to play with colour in a more expressive way. Colour theory became a tool for artists to create a more unified and powerful work. The colour wheel is a tool for artists to create a more unified and powerful work.
