

Cell Division & Reproduction

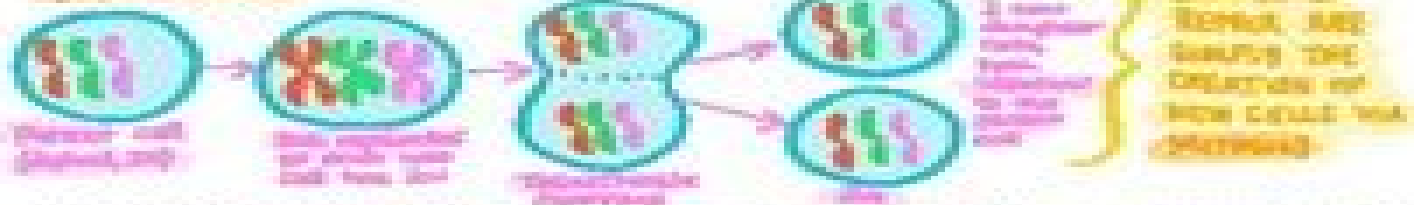

Why do organisms need to reproduce?

Cellular division is necessary because organisms must grow, develop, and replace themselves.

Reproduction is essential for species survival!

Organisms reproduce to replace themselves. They can do this by either asexual or sexual reproduction.

MITOSIS

Mitosis is a critical part of asexual reproduction. It occurs again and again, so that if you are injured, you can heal. If you are growing, you can grow. If you are old, you can replace old cells with new ones.

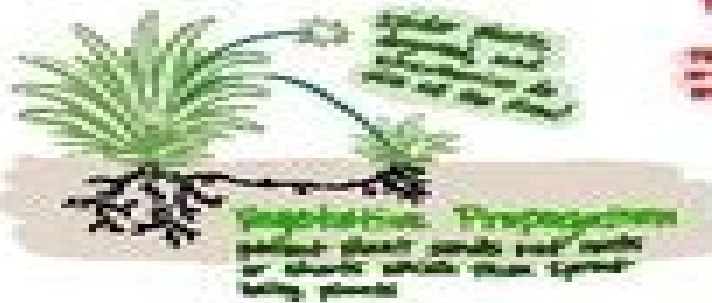

Asexual Reproduction

The offspring of asexual reproduction are clones of the parent organism and are identical.

Offspring are identical to the parent. They are clones!

There are different types of asexual reproduction:

- Budding
- Binary fission
- Vegetative propagation
- Fragmentation
- Parthenogenesis
