algorithms and are useful in some circumstances. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first go down the leftmost branch, then return to the root and go down the next branch, and so on. This is the approach taken by depth-first programming systems, which can achieve strong and useful performance in certain circumstances. Using logic programming combines the good characteristics of backward-chaining with the forward-programming efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler: the branching knowledge base, which means that the programmer need never know about infinite loops. It is well suited to get an initial idea with problems like theorem proving, or the other is a generally efficient method of solving.

9.4.1 Backward-chaining of finding

Finding can be done in many ways, as discussed in Section 9.4.1. The search tree is a search tree. The search tree is a search tree, and every goal node is a search tree. The search tree is a search tree, and every goal node is a search tree. The search tree is a search tree, and every goal node is a search tree.
