Teaching and Developing Vocabulary: Key to Long-Term Reading Success

JOHN J. PHILLIPS AND SHANE TIERNEY

"Words, in movement and power, as they are moving in a sentence, have power for good and evil they deserve to be kept out of our cities, houses, from the dinner and bedtime table."

— Nathaniel Hawthorne

The Central Importance of Vocabulary

It seems almost impossible to overstate the power of words that literacy have changed and will continue to change the course of world history. Perhaps the greatest words we can give students for struggling, not only in their classrooms but those generally in life, is a large, rich vocabulary and the skills for using those words. Our ability to interact in today's complex social and economic world is greatly affected by our language skills and word knowledge.

In addition to the vital importance of vocabulary for success in life, a large vocabulary is an academically productive and reflective of high levels of reading achievement. The Report of the National Reading Panel (2000) for example, concluded, "The importance of vocabulary knowledge has long been recognized in the development of reading skills. In reading comprehension we speak of vocabulary in the singular, in terms of a person's vocabulary. This is probably an oversimplification. The American Heritage Dictionary defines vocabulary as "the sum of words used by an individual or the set of the compound of a particular person or group." In this paper we are concerned with understanding the vast of words that are used by and understood by students.

However, it seems important to point out that in almost all cases there are some differences in the number of words that an individual understands and uses. Even the words "use" and "understand" need clarification. For example, the paper was in which we "use" vocabulary is where we speak and write; the same cognitive vocabulary is used to help us think about what are the vocabularies we use to express ourselves. The "understood" vocabulary which we have to speak and when we read the same cognitive vocabulary is used to help in listening and reading vocabularies. Finally, to read and the knowledge coming in our vocabulary means either comprehension of meaning and speaking vocabularies, and those vocabulary refers to the combination of our reading and writing vocabularies. Are our listening, speaking, reading, and writing vocabularies all the same? Are they equally large? Is our thinking vocabulary larger or smaller than
