Background

Diamond D-ZINE is a market-leading graphic design* company, specialising in producing promotional materials for the international film and music industries. There is a vacancy for an experienced designer to lead a team of 25 people, based at the company's headquarters in the city of Yaramanta. Following a series of initial online interviews, Diamond D-ZINE's recruitment team has narrowed the choice to two well-qualified candidates.

Richard Bradfield

- worked initially for a small advertising firm for two years, on various short-term projects, but felt the low budgets and rigid tasks limited his creative potential
- has spent the last three years working enthusiastically on the government's high-profile and big-budget healthy-eating and anti-smoking awareness campaigns
- currently deputy manager of a team of 22 people; he adores his private office
- fluent in two other languages, with a conversational working knowledge of a further two
- a huge fan of horror films, he keeps up with all the latest trends in this genre
- recently introduced a work-experience scheme for underprivileged students; he spoke about it in a promotional podcast posted on the government's website
- hates wearing suits and feels that a smart appearance and dress sense are unimportant; 'the quality of my work should speak for itself', he claims
- his current team goes out for a meal and dancing together three times a year, but he finds these evenings rather awkward
- lives in Yaramanta, where he is involved with a drama group and volunteers at the local homeless shelter.

Sandrine Jonas

- has worked for the past 12 years in the advertising department of a well-known global perfume and cosmetics company
- currently works within a 10-strong design team, who are expected to share desks in an open-plan office
- fluent in one other language, spoken only in her local area
- loves painting pictures of wildlife and landscapes
- recently introduced a well-received scheme to showcase works by emerging local artists in her company's offices
- keen on fashion, she is always immaculately dressed; 'a professional first impression' is her aim
- her father worked in television, so she is accustomed to meeting famous people
- would be moving to Yaramanta from her home town, some 900 kilometres away.

Both candidates have been invited to attend a whole-day selection process, to include directing a practical group task, an hour-long presentation (subject: 'Innovation through collaboration', the company's mission statement) and a final interview. The company has a reputation for posing challenging and unexpected questions at interview, to test how candidates respond under pressure.
