Locating Privacy in Tudor London Lena Cowen Orlin, 2007-12-13 Locating Privacy in Tudor London asks new questions about where private life was lived in the early modern period about where evidence of it has been preserved and about how progressive and coherent its history can be said to have been The Renaissance and the Reformation are generally taken to have produced significant advances in individuality subjectivity and interiority especially among the elite but this study of middling sort culture shows privacy to have been an object of suspicion of competing priorities and of compulsory betrayals The institutional archives of civic governance livery companies parish churches and ecclesiastical courts reveal the degree to which society organized itself around principles of preventing privacy as a condition of order Also represented in the discussion are such material artefacts as domestic buildings and household furnishings which were routinely experienced as collective and monitory agents rather than spheres of exclusivity and self expression In everyday life it is argued economic motivations were of more urgent concern than the political paradigms that have usually informed our understanding of the Renaissance Locating Privacy pursues the case study of Alice Barnham 1523 1604 a previously unknown merchant class woman subject of one of the earliest family group paintings from England Her story is touched by many of the changes in social structure religion the built environment the spread of literacy and the history of privacy that define the sixteenth century The book is of interest to literary social cultural and architectural historians to historians of the Reformation and of London and to historians of gender and women s studies

Heraldry in Urban Society Marcus Meer, 2024-09-19 Heraldry is often seen as a traditional prerogative of the nobility But it was not just knights princes kings and emperors who bore coats of arms to show off their status in the Middle Ages The merchants and craftsmen who lived in cities too adopted coats of arms and used heraldic customs including display and destruction to underline their social importance and to communicate political messages Medieval burgesses were part of a fascination with heraldry that spread throughout pre modern society and looked at coats of arms as honoured signs of genealogy and history Heraldry in Urban Society analyses the perceptions and functions of heraldry in medieval urban societies by drawing on both English and German language sources from the late fourteenth to the early sixteenth centuries Despite variations that point to socio political differences between cities and their citizens in the relatively centralized monarchy of medieval England and the more independent minded urban governments found in the less closely connected Holy Roman Empire urban heraldry emerges as a versatile and ubiquitous means of multimedia visual communication that spanned medieval Europe Urban heraldic practices defy assumptions about clearly demarcated social practices that belonged to high noble as opposed to low urban culture Townspeople s perceptions of coats of arms paralleled those of the nobility as they readily interpreted and carefully curated them as visual expressions of identity These perceptions allowed townspeople of all ranks as well as noble outsiders to use heraldry and its display along with its defacement and destruction in manuscripts spaces such as town houses public monuments halls and churches and performances like processions and joyous entries to address perennial problems of urban society in the Middle Ages The coats of arms of burgesses guilds and cities were communicative means of individual and collective representation social and political legitimization conducting and resolving conflicts and the pursuit of elevated status in the urban hierarchy Likewise heraldic communication negotiated the all important relationship between the city and wider extramural society from the commercial interests of citizens to their collective ties to the ruler
