ABSTRACT

Visitor perceived value can be a dynamic determinant in affecting the selection of tourism consumption experience. Understanding the perceived value as attendant factors in affecting purchase behaviors is significant to make substantial progress in improving the quality of hotel performance. The objectives of the study area to examine the key aspects visitor perceived value. Further, it is aimed to explore the role of the perceived value on the development of effective marketing strategy. The results of the research have provided a clearly explanation to factors that determine long-term profits to tourism industry. A novel research approach of the combined factor analysis (EFA & CFA) was applied in the present study. The results are consequently used to develop potential marketing strategies for the hotel tourism sector. Management implications and recommendations of the research are discussed.

INTRODUCTION

The Asia-Pacific region has been recognized as one of the most attractive destinations for marketers, because of the significant growth rates achieved since 1974 (World Tourism Organisation, 1998). According to a recent survey conducted by Pacific Asia Travel Association (2007), approximately 356 million international trips were made to explore destinations within the Asia-Pacific region in 2006, a 5.3% growth over 2005. Evidence on the growth of international travel by a Moodie report (2008) shows that traveler arrivals in 2007 were 3 % higher in the Asia-Pacific region compared to 2006. Above statistics suggest that a great opportunity exists within the Asia-Pacific region for better and more effective marketing strategies to attract and retain the attention of the increasing number of international travelers.

Since the Tourism Bureau of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications of Taiwan announced implementation of tourism policy of the five-day work week, which have formed a new trend in the tourism industry, the number of domestic weekend travelers increased from 56.2% in 1999 to 60.9% in 2003. Over the past decades, Taiwan government has attempted to stimulate local tourism industry by investing approximately US$1.018 billion aimed at growing local tourism. The growth of the hotel industry in Taiwan over the past decade has been significant.

It has also been shown that travelers be likely to spend a significant amount of budget on tourism related products during their trips (Heung and Cheng, 2000). Another recent report by the Taiwan Tourism Bureau has shown that, there are 108,129 rooms in 2678 hotels in Taiwan in 2010. By 2010, the total
