Q1. Label the type of teeth given in the picture and write dental formula for the same.

Dental formula:

Q2. Read the excerpt given below and answer the questions thereafter.

Teeth is one of the primary organs of the Buccal cavity. They are hard and mineral rich structures whose primary function is to chew and masticate food.

Caries, or tooth decay is the most common disease apart from common cold in contemporary society. Teeth decay originates in the buildup of plaque on teeth which harbours bacteria. The bacteria ferment the sugar and starch from dietary food acids that destroy the tooth's enamel and dentin. Once the enamel is gone, the process of decay, tooth, spreads to the underlying pulp only. The pulp contains nerves, collagen and connective tissue. Pulp is essential for sustaining dental tissue and supplying it with new living cells. There are procedures to treat such infected and provide a new permanent solution.
