Image Segmentation and Compression Using Hidden Markov Models Jia Li, Robert M. Gray, 2012-12-06 In the current age of information technology the issues of distributing and utilizing images efficiently and effectively are of substantial concern Solutions to many of the problems arising from these issues are provided by techniques of image processing among which segmentation and compression are topics of this book Image segmentation is a process for dividing an image into its constituent parts For block based segmentation using statistical classification an image is divided into blocks and a feature vector is formed for each block by grouping statistics of its pixel intensities Conventional block based segmentation algorithms classify each block separately assuming independence of feature vectors Image Segmentation and Compression Using Hidden Markov Models presents a new algorithm that models the statistical dependence among image blocks by two dimensional hidden Markov models HMMs Formulas for estimating the model according to the maximum likelihood criterion are derived from the EM algorithm To segment an image optimal classes are searched jointly for all the blocks by the maximum a posteriori MAP rule The 2 D HMM is extended to multiresolution so that more context information is exploited in classification and fast progressive segmentation schemes can be formed naturally The second issue addressed in the book is the design of joint compression and classification systems using the 2 D HMM and vector quantization A classifier designed with the side goal of good compression often outperforms one aimed solely at classification because overfitting to training data is suppressed by vector quantization Image Segmentation and Compression Using Hidden Markov Models is an essential reference source for researchers and engineers working in statistical signal processing or image processing especially those who are interested in hidden Markov models It is also of value to those working on statistical modeling

Contemporary American Women Writers Catherine Rainwater,William J. Scheick,2021-05-11 Ann Beattie Annie Dillard Maxine Hong Kingston Toni Morrison Cynthia Ozick Grace Paley Marge Piercy Anne Redmon Anne Tyler and Alice Walker all seem to be especially concerned with narrative management The ten essays in this book raise new and intriguing questions about the ways these leading women writers appropriate and transform generic norms and ultimately revise literary tradition to make it more inclusive of female experience vision and expression The contributors to this volume discover diverse narrative strategies Beattie Dillard Paley and Redmon in divergent ways rely heavily upon narrative gaps surfaces and silences often suggesting depths which are lamentably absent from modern experience or which mysteriously elude language For Kingston and Walker verbal assertiveness is the focus of narratives depicting the gradual empowerment of female protagonists who learn to speak themselves into existence Ozick and Tyler disrupt conventional reader expectations of the anti novel and the family novel respectively Finally Morrison s and Piercy s works reveal how traditional narrative forms such as the Bildungsroman and the soap opera are adaptable to feminist purposes In examining the writings of these ten important women authors this book illuminates a significant moment in literary history when women s voices are profoundly reshaping American literary tradition
