

Human Muscular and Skeletal Systems

Question 1:

(Britannica, 2023)

- a) The skeletal system divides into two parts; the axial skeleton which includes the skull, spine, and the ribs, and the appendicular skeleton which consists of everything that hangs from the axial skeleton, the upper and lower limbs, the shoulder and pelvic girdles. The axial skeleton provides support for the body and provides protection for the internal organs, the appendicular skeleton aids in the body's movement. The skeleton gives the body its shape which changes as the body grows. The bones of the skeleton are held together by ligaments, and tendons attach the muscles to the bones. When the muscles contract, they pull on the bones which create movement, or they hold the bones in a stable position. The skeleton protects the internal organs from damage by surrounding them with bone. The thoracic cage (ribcage) protects the heart and lungs, the skull protects the brain, and the vertebral column protects the spinal cord. The larger bones of the body have bone marrow inside, which is a soft, spongy tissue. Bone marrow produces red blood cells, white blood cells, and platelets.
