Abstract-Incremental algorithms can manipulate the results of earlier mining to derive the final mining output in various databases [1, 2, 3]. This study proposes a new algorithm, called the new approach for efficiently incrementally mining frequent pattern from large dynamic database. Proposed approach is a backward method that only requires scanning incremental database. Rather than rescanning the original database for some new generated frequent itemsets in the incremental database, we add the occurrence counts of newly generated frequent itemsets and delete infrequent itemsets elements. Thus, new proposed approach does not rescans the original database and to discover newly generated frequent itemsets. Proposed approach generates fewer candidates, reduces complex calculation and has good scalability as compared to the previous methods.

I. Introduction

In real-world applications, the target data is changed with time in association rules mining, and then related association rules will also be changed, so the incremental mining algorithm should be developed[4,5]. Recent important applications have called for the need of incremental mining. This is due to the increasing use of the record-based databases whose data is being continuously added. Examples of such applications include Web log records, stock market data, sales data, transactions in electronic commerce, and daily weather/traffic records, to name a few. Incremental mining not only include new data (i.e., data in the new market area, but also remove the old data (i.e., data in the most obsolete month) from the mining process [4,5,6].

Discovering the frequent item sets becomes more time consuming, if the dataset is incremental in nature. In the incremental dataset, new records are added time to time. Generally the size of the increments, i.e. the number of records added to the dataset, is very small in comparison to the whole dataset [7,8]. But due to the addition of these new records, scenarios of the rules in the updated dataset may be changed. Some of the new item sets may become frequent, while some previously derived frequent set may become infrequent. For example, say X and Y are two distinct item sets of a dataset having 500 records with support count 200. Subject to the minimum support of 50%, X is frequent item set but Y is not.

II. Temporal Data Mining

Temporal association rule mining is first introduced by Wang, Tang and Moen in year 1994-2001 together with the introduction of the TAR (Temporal Association Rules) algorithm. Temporal association rule mining has been introduced in order to solve the problems on handling time-series by including time expression into association rules[9,10]. Temporal association helps to find the valuable relationship among the different item sets, in temporal database. Temporal association rules are largely different from traditional association rules by the fact that temporal association rules attempt to model temporal relationships in the data. There are different types of temporal association rules. Defined in the literature such as intertransaction rules, optacle rules, trend dependencies, sequence association rules and calendar association rules several algorithms have been proposed for mining the temporal association rules in temporal database. Among these algorithms, Tark et al proposed the ITARM algorithm to discover the temporal frequent item sets after the temporal transaction database has been updated. The basic idea of ITARM algorithm depends on previously generated 2-candidate item set with their supports.

ITARM starts as it checks first the extension of the previous partition and attempts to find 2-candidate item set from the new partition. If it succeeds then it merges the current partition with the previous partition, and then there it finds the 3-candidate item set. This approach is basically introduced to facilitate incremental mining techniques over an ever updating transaction database [9,10,11].
