Bergmann, Bernard Pullman, 1974 COMPARED WITH the first five Jerusalem Symposia on Quantum Chemistry and Biochemistry this sixth Symposium represents a step into a new and largely uncharted area that of Chemical and Biochemical Reactivity While the previous Symposia dealt principally with the static data describing molecules even large ones of chemical and biological interest the present Symposium attempts to deal with dynamic phenomena and the factors which determine their course The complexities of these systems and the ensuing theoretical and experimental difficulties are obviously much more pronounced Nevertheless we hope that the present volume of Proceedings makes a positive contribution to the very interesting field of Reactivity the lively discussions which followed every paper seem to us a good indication that our hope is justified As last year we have included in these Proceedings only those portions of the discussions which the participants themselves formulated in writing and of course the replies given by the speakers to whom we transmitted the written formulations We must apologize to the participants in the Symposium for the long delay in publishing this volume The October 1973 War and even more its aftermath made it impossible for us to produce the work by our scheduled date of April 1 1974 as Israel's manpower especially its technically skilled manpower was not always free for its normal occupation
