The human eye is the organ which gives us the sense of sight, allowing us to observe and learn more about the surrounding world than we do with any of the other four senses. We use our eyes in almost every activity we perform, whether reading, working, watching television, writing a letter, driving a car, and in countless other ways. Most people probably would agree that sight is the sense they value more than all the rest.

The eye allows us to see and interpret the shapes, colors, and dimensions of objects in the world by processing the light they reflect or emit. The eye is able to detect bright light or dim light, but it cannot sense objects when light is absent.

process of vision

Light waves from an object (such as a tree) enter the eye first through the cornea, which is the clear dome at the front of the eye. It is like a window that allows light to enter the eye. The light then progresses through the pupil, the circular opening in the center of the colored iris.

Fluctuations in the intensity of incoming light change the size of the eye's pupil. As the light entering the eye becomes brighter, the pupil will constrict (get smaller), due to the pupillary light response. As the entering light becomes dimmer, the pupil will dilate (get larger).
