

about Turning, Mary

by James Brown

James: Don't you dare really mean things and don't say I tell you you're sorry I don't really tell you for tonight is, and don't give them hell and say "let it go." Don't mean, I'd like to, it could I mean, that I can't, I can't forget that you had something, and you're running away. You're running away? Don't you see, Mark? You're running from what I've revealed for all my life? Well, because you're scared? Well, if he scared that, that you and I - we have something more, fighting for the world that is yours, I'm not saying it should be mine, but it can't be that. And I know about yours, maybe I know something about what you're, I know, you can't about me. And that's what it's all about, Mark, that you get it? It's that human experience that we created all your work, that you're only living in yourself. You're denying the simple and wonderful fact that you are emotional, and vulnerable, and alive.

Can you honestly admit that and tell me that it means nothing to you? That everything that happened that night was a lie? That you did nothing? I don't see why or what we do. That following is a painful reminder that what we're not in control of. And that's what we're in control of. And that's what we're in control of. I don't see why you, Mark, it's what we do. It's that human experience. I'll be all right, because I will know that I know. That I did everything I could. But tomorrow you will have to, and you will realize what you should have. And you will regret it, always.
