- After the execution of the pigs, some of the animals go back to check the commandments, which have now been changed to read, "No animal shall kill any other animal without cause."
- The animals work very hard and are always hungry, but are given a long list of figures by Squealer which supposedly show that there is more food than ever.
- Napoleon's power grows as everything good is delivered to his guidance. He grows suspicious, however, and begins keeping guard dogs and having others taste his food in case of poison.
