As the aggregate price level falls, the quantity demanded of all goods and services rises. During a long period of time, however, the aggregate price level is generally constant, and the aggregate demand curve is relatively unresponsive. The aggregate demand curve is downward sloping because, as the price level falls, the quantity demanded of all goods and services rises. This is not true for all goods. Some goods are complementary goods, and the quantity demanded of these goods falls when the price level falls. But only one good is a complement to all goods and services. This good is money. When the price level falls, the quantity demanded of money falls. As the quantity demanded of money falls, the velocity of circulation rises, and the aggregate demand curve shifts to the right (see Figure 19-2).

1. Government's role in aggregate demand is to ensure that monetary policy is consistent with aggregate demand. In the long run, aggregate demand is determined by the quantity of money in the economy, the velocity of circulation, and the price level. The government can influence aggregate demand by changing the money supply, the velocity of circulation, and the price level.
